Six Denounce Bill

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Opponents of the lend-lease bill yesterday closed their case before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with six broadsides against the aid-to-England legislation as a "war measure."

After one final round of testimony beginning at 10 a. m. today, with Wendell L. Willkie the star witness in the afternoon the committee prepared to rush through a revision of the House-approved bill in time for Senate consideration next Monday.

Denounced as "Fascist" by Joseph Curran, president of the C. I. O.-affiliated Maritime union, and with five other opposition witnesses charging war implications, the bill faced a day-long fire of criticism in yesterday's seminals.

Following testimony this afternoon, Willkie will be received by President Roosevelt at the White House.

To Fly From New York

The President, who gave Willkie a personal letter to British Prime Minister Winston Churchill before his fact-finding trip to England, will be "very glad to see Mr. Willkie," the White House informally announced.

In a telephone conversation with Brig. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, the President's military aide, Willkie accepted the invitation.

What Willkie will recommend to the committee this afternoon he declined to divulge, but he left no doubt on his return from England Sunday that he considers aid to Britain vital to national defense.

Last of three witnesses to testify today, the 1940 Republican Presidential nominee will fly here from New York this morning, arriving at Washington Airport about 12:30 p. m.

House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr., who voted against the bill in the House, and Senate Minority Leader Charles L. McNary, who criticized it in original form, also are expected to confer with Willkie during the day.

May Fix Aid Limit

Two important witnesses for the bill—James B. Conant, president of Harvard University, and Mayor LaGuardia of New York—probably will precede Willkie on the stand.

Administration support on the Foreign Relations Committee meanwhile was lining up behind the bill in substantially the form it passed the House.

There were indications that some further slight "concessions" might be considered, such as an over-all limit on the aid authorization and designation by name of the nations

Churchill Grandniece Born Here to Lord Redesdale Heir

MRS. ESMOND ROMILLY AND HER BABY

Her father is in Canada with the Royal Canadian Air Force. Her great uncle spends most of his time at No. 10 Downing Street. And her mother's sister was to Adolf Hitler the "perfect Nordic dream girl."

But relationship to Winston Churchill, Britain's prime minister, and to Unity Valkyrie Freeman-Mitford, erstwhile admirer of Nazis, was a matter of small importance yesterday to a little girl in Columbia Hospital.

To begin with, she only weighs 6 pounds and 10 ounces and hasn't any name of her own, as yet. She was born Sunday to Jessica Freeman-Mitford Romilly, daughter of Lord Redesdale and sister of Unity. Her father is Esmond Romilly, nephew of Churchill.

Father and mother were married in May, 1937, after a madcap romance that attracted international attention when Lord Redesdale sought to interfere with the assistance of the British navy. They fled to America in 1939, where they scraped together a living by selling hosiery and, finally, by working as waitress and bartender in a Miami, Fla., restaurant.

Unable to obtain furlough for his daughter's arrival, Romilly talked with his wife by long-distance telephone Sunday night. He learned she and the baby are well.

Mrs. Romilly, now 22, has been living at Seminary Hill, Alexandria, Va.

House Votes New Debt Limit Of 65 Billions

Taxing of Future U.S. Securities Approved, Public Sale Provided

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

An increase in the United States debt limitation to $65,000,000,000 was voted late yesterday by the House over united Republican opposition. At the same time the House agreed to Federal taxation of all future national governmental obligations.

The House bill substitutes a new obligation called Treasury savings certificates for the war-savings certificates now authorized by law and thus paves the way for a "buy-a-bond" campaign in which the public will be invited to help finance the defense program by investment.

Minority proposals to hold the debt authorization to $60,000,000,000 were defeated as Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee argued that the increase is needed solely because of the national defense emergency.

Inflation Moves Defeated

Defeated also were inflationary amendments, a 3 per cent limitation on all interest payments, a proposal that the Federal Government buy the capital stock of the Federal Reserve Banks, and a motion to strike out the taxation of Government securities.

Administration forces hope to get the legislation through the Senate before March 15, when $1,200,000,000 worth of long-term Federal obligations mature.

The bill passed the House on a voice-vote after a motion by Representative Crowther (Republican), of New York, to recommit and amend the debt authorization to $60,000,000,000 was defeated. Earlier the Crowther amendment, offered in the committee of the whole, was

Group Health Is Put Aside As Trial Issue

Judge Proctor's Ruling May Shorten Hearing Of Antitrust Charges

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

Group Health Association, the direct but purportedly innocent cause of the doctors' trial on antitrust charges, was put on the sidelines yesterday as an issue in the case, at least as far as its origin is concerned.

Climaxing a sprited clash between opposing counsel, Justice James M. Proctor ruled in District Court that the ways, means and methods attending the launching of GHA in 1937 had no bearing on the defendants' guilt or innocence.

The effect of the ruling will be to compel revision of the prosecution's case, and possibly the defense's as well, and to shorten the trial.

It was handed down toward the close of the fourth day's session, coming after the Government had scored with presentation of documentary evidence that the American College of Surgeons was roundly rebuked by the American Medical Association for espousing the principle of prepayment medical care plans and urging further experimentation with them.

On the stand when court was recessed until 10 a. m. today was Raymond R. Zimmerman, former personnel director of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, whose questioning by Government counsel precipitated Justice Proctor's ruling.

He will return today for cross-examination by William E. Leahy, head of the battery of lawyers defending the American Medical Association, District Medical Society, Washington Academy of Surgery,

Army to Help District Police Patrol Capital 'Vice Areas'

Special military police will be brought here to augment the regular police force in patrolling specified "vice areas" frequented by the increasing number of men in uniform, it was reported yesterday by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, District police chief.

No areas will be closed to uniformed service men, Brown pointed out, but plans are under way for strict observance of sectors known to contain a large number of prostitutes and liquor establishments.

Recommendations involving such danger spots will be completed today for presentation to the District Commissioners "in the near future," the chief said. All precinct captains have been asked to submit reports on what they consider "bad areas."

The report will probably urge patrolling of Ninth Street Northwest, Pennsylvania Avenue and possibly some areas in the Southwest, by military police, Brown said.

Meanwhile 85 more selectees from the Washington area were inducted yesterday in Baltimore and sent to Fort Meade. They constituted the February quotas from nearby Maryland counties—42 from Montgomery and 43 from Prince Georges. A group of 35 colored selectees from these areas will report Friday.

Departure of the 500 District National Guardsmen of the 121st Engineers for Fort Meade has been postponed until Sunday, Gen. Albert Cox announced yesterday. A fare-

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Feb. 10. The Balkan peninsula was teeming with rumors and alarms tonight as Britain broke off its tenuous diplomatic relations with occupied Rumania, Fifth Column and paramilitary German units began to filter into Bulgaria in quantity and various indications were received of Italian preparations to get a large scale drive under way in Albania.

One of the chief causes of alarm was a report that Arkady A. Soboleff, special Russian envoy to Sofia, had informed Bulgarian Foreign Minister Ivan Popoff that Russia would not interfere if Germany demanded transit for troops across Bulgaria.

At the same time it was learned from authoritative sources that the German legation in Athens has warned Greece that the landing of British forces in Saloniki or the receipt of too large an amount of British aid against Italy might be regarded as menacing by the Reich.

Meanwhile, there was considerable fear in all southeastern capitals all day that a large-scale extension of the war in this area may be imminent.

The news from Bucharest indicates that Britain is ready to strike back at any German push to the

Bergonzoli Tells of Slaughter On Toy-Strewn Battlefield

By Richard D. McMillan.
United Press Staff Writer

With the British Army, at Soluch, Libya, Feb. 9 (Delayed).—Gen. Annibale Bergonzoli of Italy's shattered North African army today told me the amazing story of a fierce tank battle waged amid the screams of women and children on a battlefield strewn with perambulators and toys.

GEN. ANNIBALE BERGONZOLI

The battle, which occurred when Britain's army of the Nile engulfed the Fascist retreat from Bengasi, yielded Bergonzoli—famous for his "electric whiskers"—and 20,000 to 30,000 of his men as prisoners of war.

His story, as strange as any to come out of this war in the desert, was given to me in a desert mud hut. The general was wearing a mud-splattered Italian private's uniform which he evidently had believed would aid his escape.

It was the story of Britain's conquest of Eastern Libya.

With the British bearing down upon Bengasi, the Italians made an attempt to retreat farther on toward Tripoli for a determined stand.

Bergonzoli said that his forces allowed, at the last minute, a group of refugees from Bengasi to join the columns.

The refugees were mainly women and children, families of the officers and soldiers of Bengasi. They pushed ahead of the tanks, which formed flanks to the left and right.

The infantry retreated in several columns, the general said. One of these columns was made up of 15,000 Italian soldiers. With this one went Bergonzoli and the women and children.

The Italians, he said, never believed the British would be able to sweep ahead so swiftly as to engulf the fleeing Fascist columns.

Bergonzoli said the women and children became panicky when the tank battle started.

"I sought to join them and quiet them," he said, "but as the fight developed more fiercely by the minute the women and children fled from the battlefield, which was strewn with perambulators, pushcarts, toys and housekeeping goods."

There was terrible carnage, the general said. The Italian women saw their menfolk slaughtered by British guns.

There was nothing then that could be done, Bergonzoli said. The British had won the fight.

(Bergonzoli and six other Italian generals arrived in Cairo tonight from Soluch, in a British bomber. The bewhiskered Fascist was carried immediately to a hospital. It was believed that he had appendicitis, brought on by a five day-and-night walk over the desert to Tobruk when he escaped from Bardia.)

British Take 2 More Towns

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, Feb. 10.—British troops moving south along the coast from Sudan into Eritrea launched what might be a new drive by capturing the towns of Mersa Taclai and Karora after considerable fighting.

These points are just south of the Sudan border. Karora is inland a few miles, while Mersa Taclai is a minor seaport 190 miles below Port Sudan, on the Red Sea.

British army spokesmen here depreciated the possibility that this new attack would develop into an invasion aimed to meet the present Cheren (Keren) column at Massawa, pointing out that the captured towns had been considered a minor threat to Port Sudan and, as a consequence, the campaign is explainable as an effort to end this.

However, if the Italians hold the British up long at Cheren, a drive along the coast might cut their communications and prevent aid by the other army, forcing thereby the surrender not only of Cherin, but Asmara.

Fascists Hold Positions

Fairly heavy fighting continued in the Cheren area, but Italians retained the positions which they occupied after their retreat from Agordat.

South African troops, as a result of recent raids and captures of Italian posts, hold a line 50 miles inside the southern Abyssinian border. These troops have captured quantities of equipment and supplies. British warplanes have raided Cheren repeatedly, damaging its stores and trucks. South African air force fighters shot down a Fiat fighter and damaged others during a fierce dog fight over Asmara. In the meantime the town was bombed.

Italian warplanes attempted a raid on the British-occupied airdrome at Agordat. One Fiat was shot down by antiaircart fire. South African

Three Letters Of Krivitsky

The texts of three letters identified as in Krivitsky's handwriting follow:

The first, in English:

"Dear Mr. Waldman:

"My wife and my boy will need your help. Please do for them what you can. Yours,

(Signed) WALTER KRIVITSKY.

"P. S.—I went to Virginia because I know that there I can get the gun. If my wife and my friends should have trouble, please, Mr. Waldman, help them. They are good people, and didn't know why I bought the gun."

The second, in Russian, and addressed to his wife, Tonia Ginsberg, and son, Alex, 7:

"This is very difficult and I want to live very badly, but it is impossible. I love you, my only one. It is difficult for me to write, but think about me and then you will understand that I must go. Don't tell Alex yet where his father is gone. I believe that in time you will tell him, because it will be best for him. Forgive, it is very hard to write. Take care of him and be a good mother to him, and be always quiet and never get angry at him.

"He is very good, and always very pale. Good people will help you, but not enemies. I think my friends are big. I see you, Tonia and Alex. I embrace you.

"VELA.

"P. S.—On the farm of Dobertov I wrote this yesterday, but I did not have any strength in New York. I did not have any business in Washington. I went to see Dobertov because that is the only place I could get the firearm."

The third note, written in German and addressed to a friend of Krivitsky, Suzanne LaFollette, of New York City, read:

"Dear Suzanne:

"I trust that you are well, and I am dying with the hope that you will help Tonia and my poor boy. You were a good friend.

"Yours,

WALTER.

"P. S.—I also think about your brother and Dorothy."

Merrymakers at Two Parties Swell Funds for Blood Bank

Merrymakers at two parties last night funneled their happiness into the blood bank for the future good of child sufferers.

Helping in the celebration were William H. Hargrave, department commander of the legion; Department Vice Commander Patrick J. Fitzgibbons, and Department Adjutant William H. Brennan.

At Columbia Country Club 10 tables of duplicate bridge players gathered, having paid their dollar into the blood bank fund.

The work of good will of the blood bank will go on the air at 8 p. m. Friday, when stars of stage, screen and radio take part in a program to be broadcast under the auspices of the station and the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Representatives of the Junior Chamber inspected the results of the program yesterday at Children's Hospital, where many children benefit annually from the project supported by The Washington Post, the District American Legion, the American Contract Bridge League and Station WJSV.

Suicide Ruling Held Up After Friends Insist He Was Slain

Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky, mysterious Stalin-hating refugee from Russia and former western European head of the Soviet Military Intelligence, was found shot to death yesterday morning in his room at the Bellevue Hotel, 15 E Street Northwest.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald first issued a certificate of suicide, then recalled it after acquaintances of Krivitsky expressed the belief that the former Kremlin agent was assassinated by the OGPU (Russian Secret Police).

Krivitsky was known to have lived in fear of the OGPU since his disclosure in 1939 before the Dies Committee and in Saturday Evening Post articles of Russian espionage in the United States and throughout the world. He believed he was constantly pursued by Russian secret agents.

Curran, Police Confer

District Attorney Edward M. Curran emerged from a conference at police headquarters last night with Chief of Detectives Bernard Thompson and declared:

"The case is not closed."

While investigators first scouted the possibility of international intrigue, Curran said he would have all the available facts in his hands by morning and would decide then what action was to be taken.

The district attorney reported that three letters had been found on a table in Krivitsky's room, one in English, one in Russian and a third in German. None of them made a definite statement of suicidal intent, but all hunted at it.

Visit to Trotsky Revealed

One note, in English, was addressed to Louis Waldman, his New York Lawyer, and asked him to provide for Krivitsky's wife and son. Another, a long letter in Russian, was addressed to the dead man's wife. The third, written in German, was to "Susan Lafo," of New York City.

Waldman identified Miss "Lafo" as Suzanne La Follette, who, he said, is a cousin of Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, and a magazine writer.

Waldman, after examining the three notes, said the notes made the case look like suicide, but there were still many things that made him believe, he added, that Krivitsky did not kill himself.

He revealed that Krivitsky had recently completed plans to change his name legally to "Prokef." He was also planning on buying a car, and to move his family to Virginia. All these activities led Waldman to the belief that Krivitsky was not contemplating death.

It was the note to Waldman, with whom Detective Chief Thompson communicated when it was found, that put an international aspect on the death of the man identified at first as merely Samuel Ginsberg, Krivitsky's real name.

Leaving New York for Washington to demand a "thorough investigation," Waldman declared, "there is no doubt in my mind that this is the work of the OGPU."

He said Krivitsky had come to Washington late last week to seek protection of the Bureau of Investigation, with which he had been cooperating in antiespionage work. The FBI denied any connection with the man.

"Always Feared OGPU"

Krivitsky's body was identified by Dr. James B. Matthews, Dies Committee research director, who declared:

"This is fantastic and unbelievable. Krivitsky always feared that the OGPU would get him. He once told me, 'They'll get me, sure as hell. The OGPU is going to assassinate Trotsky and me. When I'm dead, don't ever believe that I committed suicide.'"

Conviction that Krivitsky was murdered was expressed also by Boris Shub, who was Krivitsky's interpreter before the Dies Committee.

He told the United Press in New York that Krivitsky was "too much of an egotist to kill himself," had no financial reason to commit suicide and "was almost fanatically devoted to his wife and particularly his 7-year-old son, an only child."

Krivitsky had been dead about six hours, Coroner MacDonald estimated, when his body was found at 9:30 a. m. by Thelma Jackson, 21, colored chambermaid, in the fifth-floor hotel room.

Pistol on the Floor

She had passed the door several times during the morning and had knocked each time without getting an answer. When she finally entered with a passkey—the door was locked—she saw the coatless and shoeless body on the bloodstained bed.

An automatic pistol, from which one shot had been fired lay on the floor beside his shoes. An envelope containing the three notes, and a Canadian passport was on a nearby desk.

The bullet had entered his head through the right temple.

Carrying a light canvas bag, Krivitsky had registered at 5:40 o'clock the previous afternoon with what the desk clerk described as "a trembling hand." He had gone immediately to his room and ordered a bottle of soda, which was delivered. From that time hotel attaches heard nothing from him.

No Shot Heard

There were no outgoing telephone calls, no visitors and no occupants of the hotel heard a shot during the night, hotel employes said.

The possibility that an assassin might have entered a window, perhaps swinging down by a rope from another window, was discounted by detectives. Neither was there a ledge along which a killer could have crawled, nor a fire escape nearby.

Inspector Thompson said that the door and the window to Krivitsky's room were locked from the inside, precluding any possibility of a murderer's escape. There were no fingerprints on the pistol. They were washed out by blood stains.

Krivitsky had signed the hotel register under the name of Walter Prokef, of New York City, a name which his attorney said the Russian had decided to adopt legally.

Waldman's statement before leaving New York said:

"In my opinion, Gen. Krivitsky did not commit suicide. He was murdered by the OGPU. Only last week in this office he told me that he was aware that he was being shadowed and that his life was in great danger.

"Particular Reason for Fears"

"Having already given important information to the Federal authorities and being in possession of a great deal more, he asked me to take up with the Federal Bureau of Investigation the question of his protection.

"He had particular reason for his fears because of the sudden appearance in this city (New York) of one of the deadliest agents of the OGPU."

Waldman said Krivitsky once had been trailed from a retsaurant in New York by two Russian agents whom he recognized. He ducked into the office of a nearby newspaper and called police, who escorted him to his quarters.

Mrs. Tanya Krivitsky, the dead man's wife, who is understood to be hiding away in New York with their son, Alexander, told the New York Times that her husband left that city Wednesday on several missions. Among other things he was to see Representative Martin Dies and seek refuge for her and the boy in Virginia.

Waldman, on arrival here last night said Krivitsky intended to go to Charlottesville, Va., to look for a farm. He said the Russian was anxious to find an isolated spot where he and his wife and child could live in safety "from the Russian police."

The attorney inferred that Krivitsky sought particularly to hide from one of his enemies who had recently been released from jail.

Only last week, he said, Krivitsky and he, while walking together in New York, had seen "one of the OGPU's most prominent agents."

He said that about five weeks ago Krivitsky, who had moved from country to country since breaking with the Stalin regime, signified his intention of becoming an American citizen and had applied for his first naturalization papers. He also had applied to the New York Supreme Court to legalize Walter Prokef as his name, the attorney reported.

On his arrival from New York, Waldman was met by Matthews and his first words to the Dies Committee agent were: "Well, you see what they do to your witnesses, J. B."

Identified Also Lawyer

The attorney told reporters that his client was to have testified Friday before the Coudert committee, a New York State Senate body investigating subversive activities in New York schools, but had failed to show up.

Waldman was escorted to the City Morgue, where he confirmed Matthews' identification of Krivitsky.

Matthews and Waldman are the only persons who identified the body.

Handwriting Corresponds

District Attorney Curran said the handwriting in notes left by the dead man corresponded with that on the hotel register. He said there was no doubt in his mind that it was suicide, but that he intended to make a thorough investigation.

Curran also scouted the possibility that Krivitsky's was a typical "Kremlin suicide," in which members of the Stalin inner circle, fallen from the dictator's grace, allegedly kill themselves to spare their families' destruction by the OGPU.

The theory was advanced unofficially, however, that Krivitsky may have been driven to suicide by constant fear of assassination.

Krivitsky told friends some time ago that he had visited Leon Trotsky in Mexico before the exiled Communist leader was assassinated last summer and that Trotsky had been fearful both of them would be killed by the OGPU.

The Saturday Evening Post, in publishing an article by Krivitsky in April, 1939, said:

"Gen. Krivitsky, the one leading survivor of the great purge in the Red Army, served in the Soviet military intelligence department for nearly 14 years, until May, 1933. He was often sent abroad on highly confidential missions. He was then appointed director of the Soviet war industries institute, a post he held in 1933-34. The following year he was entrusted with the office of chief of the military intelligence in Western Europe, in charge of the major secret operations of the Soviet abroad during 1935-37.

"Krivitsky broke with Stalin at the end of November, 1937, after the wholesale executions of the top-ranking generals of the Red army, with whom he had been associated for 18 years. Two attempts were made upon his life by Stalin's OGPU agents in France. Escaping from Stalin's vengeance, Krivitsky recently came to the United States as a refugee, having determined to give up all political activity, though he is still a believer in the true communism of Lenin."

Soviet-Nazi Pact No Surprise To the Late Gen. Krivitsky

Walter G. Krivitsky, former top-ranking Russian secret foreign agent, who was found dead here yesterday, was not surprised by the Russian-German mutual nonaggression and economic pact which preceded the outbreak of the war.

"The idea prevailing up to the recent Russian-German pact that Hitler and Stalin were mortal enemies was pure myth," Krivitsky wrote in "In Stalin's Secret Service," published by Harper & Brothers in 1939. "It was a distorted picture, created by clever camouflage and the vapors of propaganda. The true picture of their relations was that of a persistent suitor who would not be discouraged by rebuffs. Stalin was the suitor. There was enmity on Hitler's side. On Stalin's there was fear."

One reason why Moscow might have wished to erase Krivitsky was his willingness to disclose Communist party methods in this country.

He had written in the same book:

"For all its long years of activity up to 1935, the American Communist Party had almost nothing to show. Organized labor did not respond to its slogans, and the mass of American people were barely aware of its existence. Even in those years, however, the party was important to us, because it was more closely connected than any other Communist party with our OGPU and Intelligence Service. During the mechanization and motorization of the Red army, we had members of the American Communist Party as our agents in aircraft and automobile factories and in munitions plants.

"With the thousands of recruits enlisted under the banner of democracy, the Communist Party OGPU espionage ring in the United States grew much larger and penetrated previously untouched territory. By carefully concealing their identity, Communists found their way into hundreds of key positions. It became possible for Moscow to influence the conduct of officials who would not knowingly approach a Comintern or OGPU agent with a 10-foot pole.

"More challenging perhaps than this success in espionage and pressure politics, is the Comintern's penetration into labor unions, publishing houses, magazines and newspapers—a maneuver accomplished by simply erasing the Comintern's label and stamping anti-Hitlerism in its place."

Truman Seeks Arms Buying Investigation

By the Associated Press

Senator Truman (Democrat), Missouri, demanded a Senate investigation of defense spending yesterday with the assertion that contracts should not "be let on the basis of friendship or political affiliation."

He told the Senate it was his opinion that "violations of ethics and common sense procedure" had occurred in Army and Navy purchasing.

Demanding a thorough study of the Government's program of "educational orders," Truman said that Ford, Chrysler and General Motors "have been given $11,000,000 apiece for educational purposes."

"This is merely a gift," he added.

Truman said one of the first contracts let under the defense program was for $11,564,000 to Sanderson & Porter, of New York, for construction of an ordnance plant at Wilmington, Ill. Referring to F. Blossome as a member of the Government's Construction Advisory Board, Truman said Sanderson & Porter was "Mr. Blossom's firm."

The Missouri Senator said that many defense contract awards "have been traced to a connection between a member of the contractor's firm and Mr. Dresser." He said F. Dresser was another member of the Construction Advisory Board.

"Friendship should not be a handicap to anyone seeking work in the War Department," Truman continued. "When a friendship, however, dominates the selection of an inferior contractor, then that selection is wrong. . . .

"Col. Wahlbridg, of Wahlbridg & Aldinger, was a personal friend of Mr. Dresser, so I am told.

"Wahlbridg & Aldinger of Detroit, and Foley Brothers of St. Paul, Minn., were awarded the $8,000,000 Remington Small arms ammunition plant at Lake City, Mo. The two firms were neither geographically located in regard to the job, nor were they in any way better equipped than local contractors of Kansas and Missouri."

Under the defense program, Truman contended, small contractors have been "left out in the cold" and "the policy seems to be to make the big man bigger and put the little man completely out of business."

Taft Fears Power Given President In British Aid Bill

New York, Feb. 10 (AP).—Senator Robert A. Taft (Republican), of Ohio, asserted tonight that passage of the British-aid bill would give President Roosevelt "the power to take us into war" and added:

"He is not likely to do so if the people are opposed to that course. But we face the choice, I believe, during the next six months."

Taft spoke before the Economic Club of New York, which was addressed also by former United States Senator Ernest W. Gibson, of Vermont, chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, and Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, chancellor of New York University. All spoke on the topic, "How Far Shall We Go to Aid England?"

Gibson said that it was necessary for this country to see that the aid given England reached that country and "if it should become necessary to convoy, with our Navy, then we should convoy."

Dr. Chase urged the Nation to follow a "psychology of maintaining peace, not of drifting helplessly into war."

He said he believed the British aid bill "should not be passed without proper curbs and restrictions."

Krivitsky Revealed Tactics Of OGPU Before Dies Group

Gen. Walter Krivitsky, the Russian revolutionary figure whose career closed with a bullet in his head, told the Dies Committee in October, 1939, that the OGPU, Russian secret police, tracked down Stalin's foes in foreign lands and kidnaped and murdered them "if necessary."

Gen. Krivitsky appeared before the committee on October 11 and related in detail the machinations of the Communist Party and the party's political leaders dominated by Stalin.

He revealed that the rank and file of the party and many of its leaders during the years preceding 1936 hoped "that the party or through the party we would gradually enter into a period of greater democracy in the party and through the party in the country as well."

In 1936 and 1937, Stalin, he said, purged from his party all elements that would have been the basis for democratization. He then told how the party's international branches are under the complete domination of Moscow and how the secret police not only act as international spies but keep in constant touch with Russians and others living abroad who are known to oppose Stalin.

During his testimony Krivitsky revealed the terrible thoroughness of the OGPU and thereby suggested a reason for his death, whether it was murder or suicide. Every member of the Communist Party in the United States is "potentially" available to the OGPU for assistance in its activities, he disclosed.

In other words, Krivitsky, an obvious foe of Stalin because of his testimony before the committee and his many writings in the spring of 1939, was subject to shadowing not only by OGPU agents but by hundreds of Communists in this country.

Charges Terrorism

"I know that these people are recruited for the OGPU from the Communist Party and from organizations which are regarded as sympathetic with the Communist Party, and that often, for a particular job, it was more advantageous to use a person who was actually not a member of the party."

Previously, the general had been asked by Rhea Whitley, committee counsel, if the OGPU ever takes "positive action" in event an individual outside Russia "becomes sufficiently dangerous to the Soviet government and its interests?"

"Yes sir," Krivitsky replied. "In addition to the passive role of espionage, there is an active role beginning with their compromising those people and discrediting them, and extending to kidnaping and murdering them, if necessary."

A campaign to discredit Krivitsky, it was recalled, was launched by Communist publications in this country after appearance of his articles on the Soviet in the Saturday Evening Post.

Krivitsky said he was born Samuel Ginsberg on June 28, 1899, in a city in western Ukraine which was a part of Poland until a month before he testified.

Flood Maroons 3,000 in Hospital

Ukiah, Calif., Feb. 10 (U.P.).—The Russian River and Mill Creek overflowed tonight, isolating the Mendocino State Hospital for the Insane, marooning its 2,800 patients and 362 employes, and blocking virtually every highway in Mendocino County.

Every route to the hospital include numerous inmates of the ward for criminal insane. Hospital authorities said the situation was "bad" because they couldn't reach Ukiah or other towns. They expected the water to go higher by tomorrow morning.

Waesche Fears Arms Sabotage Attempt Soon

By the Associated Press

Congress has been told, a committee report disclosed yesterday, that efforts to sabotage the Nation's defense program "will not much longer be delayed."

Rear Admiral R. R. Waesche, commandant of the Coast Guard, informed a House Appropriations subcommittee that there was "every reason to believe" that such sabotage would soon be attempted and predicted "We will be caught napping by not having sufficient personnel to give the protetcion to our harbors and waterfronts which we should give."

Urging 200 additional men for port protection duty, Waesche reported the Coast Guard has about 2,000 men engaged in patrolling anchorages in harbors, supervising the loading of explosives and guarding against acts of sabotage.

Waesche said he and other officials had bbeen "considerably worried" about the protection of the so-called Soo Locks at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. Closing of those locks for any reason would be a "terrific blow" to the defense program, Waesche conceded, because of the interruption which would result to the flow of iron ore to the steel mills. He said the Coast Guard was working closely with the Army to insure the safety of the locks.

Waesche pointed out that a total of $1,577,834,375 had been authorized during the current fiscal year for Government and private shipbuilding, and added:

"To date not one penny has been authorized for the establishment of required aids to navigation without which most of the new naval and Army bases cannot be utilized, and to insure the safe navigation of this tremendously increased naval and merchant marine fleet."

Waesche disclosed the Navy had recommended that all the Coast Guard shrips, including the 80-foot cutters, be furnished gas-mask equipment, gas suits, helmets, rubber gloves, decontamination apparatus and chemicals. When asked if procurement of this equipment could be delayed, he said:

"I would hate to eliminate any of that gas-mask equipment because we may be called upon next week to convoy merchant ships overseas."

Tokyo has ordered sweeping reorganization of the Japanese Embassy staff here to set up a "new order" in diplomatic representation under Admiral Kichisaburo Nomura, the new Ambassador, who arrives in Washington today.

Three secretaries will be replaced. Heading the new staff, as chief advisor to the Ambassador, is Kanami Wakasugi, former consul general in New York. He is accompanying the new Ambassador to Washington, along with Katuzo Okumura, new first secretary.

Sadao Iguchi, now acting consul general in New York, will become embassy counselor. Hidenari Terasaki and Koto Matsudaira will come later from Tokyo as secretaries.

KATE MOOG,

Roosevelt Asks $680,118,000 More for Army

President Roosevelt yesterday asked Congress for $680,118,000 additional for the Army, a large part of which will pay for an increase in the cost of the military cantonment program over original estimates.

Roughly half of the supplemental defense estimate—$338,880,000—is required to complete construction already under way at Army posts and camps, for which $609,425,525 was appropriated last year by Congress. The actual cost is expected to run about 56 per cent higher than then estimated due to rising labor and materials costs and underestimating requirements and costs, it was officially explained.

The rest of the proposed new appropriation will provide for:

Construction projects not included in the original plans—movie theaters, baseball fields, clubs, and other recreational facilities; housing for special units; reception centers.

Units for Alaska

Strengthening of the defenses of Alaska by building additional landing fields and housing for larger troop garrisons, and possibly an additional major air base.

Expansion of Army air fields in the United States, including new shops and runways.

Additional facilities to increase the air and ground defense of the Panama Canal.

A $15,866,000 land purchase and lease program to make larger training areas available for the expanding Army. Existing military reservations, Budget Director Smith explained in a memorandum accompanying the estimates, are too small for large troop units to "simulate battle conditions" in field maneuvers.

Estimates Increase

The original estimates for the cost of the cantonment program were based on a per capita cost of $450 for cantonment housing and $320 in tent camps. Present estimates, he stated, indicate that the cantonments will cost $700 per man and the tent camps $500.

Meanwhile, the Senate passed and sent to the White House a $175,000,000 appropriation for Army clothing and equipment. The funds required for the projected 1,400,000-man Army were asked in a special bill to permit orders to be placed now. Savings will result from buying in "off seasons," officials said.

Willkie to Be Last Witness In Senate on Aid Bill Today

Pending formal strategy conferences by the Senate bill managers, some of their number expressed a willingness to accept the Dirksen amendment, with some revision. That only successful House Republican amendment provided that Congress could recall the proposed Presidential powers at will by a concurrent resolution not requiring White House signature.

Republican Party differences on aid-Britain policies, already dramatized by Willkie, were further emphasized by divergent stands of Senate Republicans.

Senator Lodge (Republican), of Massachusetts, told the Senate in a speech that while he favored help for Britain the Administration's lend-lease measure would give the President "the power of life and death" over the country, would "increase the danger of foreign war, and the danger of totalitarian control at home."

Warning By Austin

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, assistant Senate minority leader, in a statement to newsmen warned against "blind opposition" to the bill. Austin said he thought Willkie did "a fine thing" in flying to England to survey conditions. He said Republicans should give "reasonale study" to possible changes but should do nothing to "destroy" the legislation.

Against the 135-to-24 Republican division in the House against the bill, Senate bill managers were hoping to win over about half of the Senate minority.

Curran, friend of John L. Lewis, told the Senate Committee he believes that if the lend-lease bill becomes a law, "Congress will have abdicated."

Curran said he had "no use for Hitler, Mussolini or any other dictator," but the "great majority of American workers want no part of this war." He charged Britain was refusing to release her normal Pacific trade routes to American operators, while insisting that American ships be turned over to her for war use.

United States Seamen "Beached"

Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, agreed with Curran's statement that transfer of ships to Britain "is dumping American seamen on the beach."

In reply to a question by Clark, Curran said: "We believe that if the present trend is continued—the transfer and trade of ships as soon as they are built—the United States will be a very unimportant factor, if any, in maritime commerce after the war."

"Do you visualize a totalitarian world under dictators as a world in which American seamen would have the best opportunity for jobs?" asked Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida.

"Absolutely not," replied Curran. But he said it was "hypothetical" whether Hitler would bar American ships from European commerce if he wins.

Ralph Townsend, Oakland, Calif., writer, who said he served two years with the State Department in Canada and China, told the committee he believed the pending bill would "make America the unmistakable aggressor against nations which have not sought objectively to molest us."

Rosa M. Farber, of Detroit, acting national chairman of the "Mothers of the United States of America," called the lend-lease measure "the push us into war bill" and said "the mothers of this Nation are rising up in angry and bitter protest" against it. She said she favored a strong national defense but opposed "the unwarranted and unjustified militarization of our Nation."

Other witnesses were:

Merwin K. Hart, New York attorney, who said he thought the bill "probably would lead us into the war" and that American involvement might enable Russia to "take control here."

Judge John A. Matthews, of South Orange, N. J., called the bill "primarily an attempt on the part of the Administration to get Congressional sanction for what they didn't dare do before the election, for what they promised not to do during the election campaign, and for what they fear to do in contravention of their preelection pledges unless you of the Congress by passing this bill say, 'Go ahead and we will share the popular blame.'"

Miss Catherine Curtis, chairman of the Women's National Committee to Keep the United States Out of War, who said she spoke for "innumerable thousands of women who do not want this country to become involved again in a European trade war." She called the aid measure an "outrageous, un-American, deceitful bill."

Senator Lodge, who disclosed his position against the bill for the first time in his Senate speech, said he would favor aiding England through "a concrete and definite bill, within reasonable limits, that is just to all parties."

"Safest Course"—Barkley

Senator Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, said in a radio address last night that the aid bill offered "the safest course to keep us out of war" and was "the minimum which we can or ought to do in defense of our own country and the things for which it stands."

Replying to the argument of some critics of the measure, Barkley declared that the bill "does not remotely set up a dictatorship," only conferring on the President "such powers as are deemed necessary in the midst of a great and unprecedented emergency."

He called it "absurd to say that the President can or would be so lacking in judgment as to deprive the United States of essential defense articles in order to lend, lease or give them to some other nation."

Aviatrix to Train Plane Mechanics

PHOEBE OMLIE,

Phoebe Omlie, the first licensed woman pilot and the first to get an airplane mechanic's license, is making "grease monkeys" out of 5,000 men as part of the defense program.

Phoebe, who has an impressive array of achievements in aviation from racing to teaching, is in charge of a special WPA project for the training of aviation ground servicemen to meet the increased needs of expanding civil and military aviation.

A small, vivacious brunette, the widow of Capt. Vernon C. Omlie, noted aviator, she was hard at work yesterday in her new office in the Commerce Department working out plans for the $1,429,000 project.

Teaching men and women to fly, to locate a squeak in a motor, daub grease where it should go and put a patch on a wing is nothing new to Phoebe. Under the Tennessee Aviation Commission, she inaugurated a program of aviation instruction in 1936 in public schools in Nashville, Chattanooga, Bristol, Knoxville and Memphis, where she makes her home.

It is her job now to outline a course of instruction to train ground crews to service an airplane, keep clerical records and do numerous other jobs around an airport that do not require highly skilled mechanics.

"It has been figured out that for every pilot in the air there are nine ground workers," she said.

Qualified enrollees are being selected from WPA rolls by local WPA authorities to take the three-month course. They will get their regular WPA wages. Although the chief school ma'm is a woman, the course is limited to men.

District Marine, Now in Cuba, Wins Lieutenancy

John Apergis, 24-year-old member of Washington's Fifth Battalion Marine Corps Reserve climaxed his military career yesterday when he was appointed a second lieutenant in that organization, now in Guantanamo, Cuba.

Apergis was born in Piraeus, Greece, and came to this country in 1927. He lived for some time in New York then moved to the 500 block of D Street Southeast in Washington and entered Eastern High School, where he became a captain in the high school cadets.

Upon graduation he was appointed to the Army's West Point Preparatory School at Fort Monroe, Va. He was not one of those chosen to enter West Point, however, and after serving a year in the Army enlisted in the Fifth Battalion of the Marine Corps Reserve.

While in the Reserve he distinguished himself by winning the coveted Weinnman medal last summer for being the most outstanding enlisted man in the battalion.

U.S. May Force Lines to Haul Arms Material

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Legislation empowering the Government to deny entry into United States ports of merchant vessels which decline to transport specified defense cargoes is being considered by the Maritime Commission as an answer to the current tight shipping situation, it was learned yesterday.

Consensus in the commission, it was reported, is that outright requisitioning of American freighters under a Presidential shipping emergency order is less desirable than some other, more flexible method. Similarly, the establishment of a rigid priority system by Congressional authorization is also said to be too cumbersome.

Under the entry method, it was explained, the Maritime Commission or the Customs Bureau, or both, would indicate to shippers that their vessels would not be allowed to enter American ports if they failed to pick up cargoes designated by Federal defense agencies as vital to the defense program.

This arrangement, similar to that used during the last war by this Government, would permit individual consideration for each available shipment of defense material. As each case arose, arrangements would be made to insure transportation of that commodity most needed at the time.

Certain nondefensee items command higher freight rates than the raw materials needed for defense. Thus some vessels are finding it more profitable to carry "luxury" goods from African, South American and Asiatic ports than tungsten, manganese, chromium ore and the like.

A hint of the probable method was contained in a recent address of Maritime Commissioner Howard L. Vickery to the United States Coast Guard Academy. Capt. Vickery said that "intelligent direction of ship movements and temporary cessation of imports of luxury products or products of which there is an adequate domestic supply . . . may be sufficient for the needs of the country."

Plane Trip Reunites Laddie, Master—It May Be Too Late

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

LADDIE WITH HIS MASTER ONCE AGAIN—TWA Hostess Ellen Barney delivers Laddie, heartbroken airdale, to his master, Private Everett Scott, at Monterey, Calif.

By the Associated Press

Monterey, Calif., Feb. 10.—The love of a dog for a man found expression in a dramatic reunion at the end of a 2,000-mile trail today.

Laddie, desperately ill and inconsolable since Everett Scott was called to Army duty from Chanute, Kans., three months ago, was met at an airport by his master.

Scott peered into the basket in which the 10-year-old airedale, wrapped up in blankets and hot water bottles, had made the plane trip.

"Laddie, old boy, you don't look so good," Scott said softly.

A flicker of eyes and the lifting of one ear constituted the aging dog's response.

The dog was taken to special quarters by a veterinarian at Fort Ord, where Scott is in the service. If he lives, he'll be mascot of the Seventh Division of 15,000 men.

Three months ago Everett Scott left Laddie behind when he joined the Army and was assigned to Fort Ord, Calif. The dog pined for his master and refused to eat.

Then it was arranged to send the dog to Scott by plane. He arrived yesterday, but his heart was so weakened veterinarians feared he might die.

Meade Expects 121st Engineers By Week's End

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Correspondent.

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Feb. 10.—Progress of construction on the camp hospital here has led to the hope that the 121st Engineers, District National Guard, may be moved to Meade before the end of this week, Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, division commander, said today.

If the move is left to the discretion of Col. John W. Oehmann, regimental commander, it will be made Sunday, after the recently inducted District Guardsmen are reviewed by Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, District Guard commander. Col. Oehmann told The Post he hoped to move on to Meade directly from the review, rather than bringing the regiment here and taking it back to Washington a few days later.

"I hope we can make the two moves at once," he said. "We are ready to go out there as soon as our barracks are heated, but we would like to save as much moving as we can."

Gen. Reckord said today that as soon as facilities for 200 hospital beds are ready, three regiments whose quarters are completed will be moved in. The first of these will be the District's Engineers; the other two are the 175th Infantry, of Maryland, and the 116th Infantry, of Virginia.

Movement of the infantry regiments, the 115th, of Maryland, and the 176th, of Virginia, and the Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania artillery regiments must await completion of barracks as well as hospital facilities. Reckord indicated that he believed these would not be ready before the end of next week.

Heat was turned into the main system of the 1,000-bed camp hospital Saturday. Today 18 ward buildings were connected into the system and workmen began tracing and stopping leaks and making minor repairs. As soon as heat has been in the buildings 48 hours they will be ready for use.

An incipient threat of epidemic was stamped out today when two officers and four men of Company H, 116th Infantry, of Martinsville, Va., who had been exposed to scarlet fever were placed in quarantine immediately upon arrival.

The disease, they said, appeared at Martinsville after the two officers and four men had left for schools here.

The officers are Lieuts. Clarence R. Joyce and Eugene F. Wales, among 35 Virginia officers detailed to a junior officers school. The men, sent in advance of their regiment as students in the Bakers and Cooks School, are Privates Frank T. Warren, jr., Everett J. Roach, Fred I. Roach and Lyndoll Bousman. All will remain in quarantine 21 days.

In a recruit reception center, where selects from Virginia, Maryland, the District and Pennsylvania are outfitted and classified, 40 men were placed in "working quarantine" after one of their number was discovered to have measles.

The reception center today sent 157 selects to Indiantown Gap, Pa., of whom 70 were assigned to medical units; 45 to quartermaster and 39 to ordnance; 111 to Fort Story, Va., 106 of whom went to the 246th Coast Artillery, of Virginia, and 5 to the Third Ordnance Regiment; 40 to Fort Belvoir, Va., to the Thirtieth Engineers.

Tomorrow 125 will be sent to Belvoir to join the 394th, Fifty-sixth and Thirtieth Engineers, the 1320th Service Company and the Third Ordnance Regiment. Tonight's strength report showed 1,825 selects in camp, with 316 expected tomorrow.

Maj. Gen. Henry C. Pratt, commanding the Second Corps, of which the Twenty-ninth Division is part, will visit Fort Meade tomorrow on an informal tour of the camp.

Intensive training will begin February 24 and will continue through June 2.

From June 2 until September 1, training will be by brigades and with the whole division. It was expected that the period after September 1 would be largely occupied in monster war games, possibly in the Southwest.

Rep. Lambertson Is 'Embarrassed' By Traffic Arrest

Representative William P. Lambertson (Republican), of Kansas, yesterday charged the Police Department with causing him "unnecessary embarrassment" in arresting him for what he termed "minor" traffic violations.

Mr. Lambertson paid a $5 fine in Police Court Saturday before Judge John P. McMahon after being charged with driving through a red light on New Jersey Avenue last Wednesday.

"The judge didn't appear very interested in my side of the story," Representative Lambertson said, "so I paid the fine and let it go at that."

Funds Sought To Give Army 36,000 Planes

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Chairman Snyder, of the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, said yesterday that the Administration planned to ask funds for 11,000 additional Army planes, and that his group proposed that the increase be boosted to 15,000.

Budget estimates are now being prepared for the 11,000-plane expansion program, he said, which would raise Army air strength to 36,000 first line craft. Something over 4,000 military planes are now in service, with about 21,000 contracted for delivery within the next 17 months.

"I have asked the War Department, on behalf of the subcommittee, to increase the new program to 15,000 planes," Snyder said. "We feel that an air force of 40,000 planes is required to balance the 1,400,000-man field Army and other preparations under way."

It was learned at the Office of Production Management that January military plane production totaled between 900 and 1,000 craft, substantially exceeding estimates 60 days ago by William S. Knudsen, OPM director general.

In a speech delivered to the National Association of Manufacturers on December 13, Knudsen said that original estimates of 1,000 planes per month beginning January 1, 1941, would have to be scaled down by about 30 per cent. This would have meant a rate of about 700 planes in January.

Last month Knudsen said that December production of 799 military airplanes had been larger than he anticipated and that he "hoped" January output would be somewhat greater. He gave no indication, however, that it would rise to the 900 or 1,000 level.

It was believed that Knudsen probably erred on the conservative side in his estimates of the December total and that, instead of 799 planes produced during the month, 850 was nearer to the correct figure.

War Department sources disclosed, meanwhile, that the first of the new fighter planes embodying all of the lessons of the European war were delivered to the Air Corps in the past week. New P-40Ds, carrying self-sealing gas tanks, armor and greatly increased firepower, are now being shipped from the Curtiss plant at Buffalo to Army bases.

These sources also revealed that tests have begun on a new improved model of the Flying Fortress bomber. The B-17D four-engined craft will carry armor and leakproof fuel tanks and be faster than the B-17Ss, now being delivered, it was said.

Funds Asked To Increase Coast Guard

A bill appropriating $1,146,394,496 for the Treasury and Postoffice Departments during the 1942 fiscal year beginning July 1 was sent to the House yesterday by its appropriations committee.

It provided $304,330,185, including expansion of Coast Guard defense and neutrality duties, for the Treasury Department, and $842,064,311 for the Postoffice Department. Both totals were slightly lower than President Roosevelt's budget estimates.

The Treasury total represented a $5,600,000 increase over the current year's appropriation, primarily because of additional defense work.

The committee asked Congress to appropriate $62,193,150 for the Coast Guard, an increase of $18,959,440 over the 1941 figure. It also approved a $6,370,000 contract authorization fund.

The Coast Guard program, in addition to regular activities, includes:

Personnel increases of commissioned officers, cadets, warrant officers and enlisted men, $5,121,342; installation of searchlights, depth finders, antiaircraft machine-guns, two-way portable radios, and purchase of gas masks, $1,500,000; three new 327-foot cutters, $5,000,000; 14 smaller cutters, $2,165,000.

The total recommended for the Postoffice Department was $26,574,134 higher than the current year's appropriation, but $3,948,276 below the budget estimates.

Twenty additional postal inspectors were recommended to organize mail facilities at new military cantonments.

The committee advocated that 6-cent air mail stamps be printed in only one color to save money. Funds for domestic air mail transportation were fixed at $21,280,327, an increase of $840,128. A decrease of $769,218 in foreign air mail funds was provided, making the amount for that service $15,477,831.

The committee recommended an appropriation of $135,618,350—an increase of 20 per cent—for the Internal Revenue Bureau to permit a more careful examination of income tax returns in the upper brackets.

Supreme Court Upholds Curb On Picketing

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

With three of his liberal colleagues arrayed against him, Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter yesterday ruled in a 5-to-3 decision that State courts may enjoin peaceful picketing which is "enmeshed" in a "context of violence."

In two other cases of major importance to industry and labor, the court:

Administered a blow to the Ford Motor Co. by refusing to review a lower court decision upholding a National Labor Relations Board order that Ford reinstate 23 employes allegedly fired for union activity; and Held, under the constitutional guaranty of free speech, that peaceful picketing may not be enjoined merely because there is no immediate employer-employe dispute.

Background of Violence

In his opinion upholding the picketing injunction, Justice Frankfurter pointed out that "the picketing in this case was set in a background of violence" involving a dispute between a Chicago Milk Wagon Drivers Union and the Meadowmoor Dairies, Inc.

With Justices Black, Reed and Douglas vigorously dissenting, Justice Frankfurter held that "in such a setting of violence it could justifiably be concluded that the momentum of fear generated by past violence would survive even though future picketing might be wholly peaceful.

"So the Supreme Court of Illinois found. We cannot say that such a finding so contradicted experience as to warrant our rejection."

Justice Frankfurter, a noted opponent of the use of injunctions in labor disputes, declared that freedom of speech and press "will not be advanced or even maintained by denying to the States . . . the power to deal with coercion due to extensive violence. If the people of Illinois desire to withdraw the use of the injunction in labor controversies, the democratic process for legislative reform is at their disposal.

Beauty Shop Involved

"Just because these industrial conflicts raise anxious difficulties, it is most important for us not to intrude into the realm of policymaking by reading our own notions into the Constitution."

The other picketing decision, written by Justice Frankfurter for a 6-2 majority, involved unsuccessful efforts of an A. F. of L. union in Chicago to organize Ross W. Swing's beauty parlor. The union picketed the shop and Swing obtained an injunction.

Holding that the injunction was issued on the grounds that the picketers were not employes of the beauty shop, Justice Frankfurter said "such a ban of free communication is inconsistent with the guarantee of freedom of speech."

Some observers thought that this decision might spell the doom of several State laws forbidding picketing except with consent of the workers in the picketed plant.

The Ford case which was refused review yesterday was the first of the company's many disputes with the Labor Board to come before the Supreme Court.

That part of the board's findings upheld by the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati alleged that the Ford Co. had intimidated employes, had interfered with union organizing, and had illegally discharged 23 workers. Some of the charges grew out of assaults on members of the United Automobile Workers Union (C. I. O.) when they were distributing leaflets outside Ford's River Rouge plant in 1937.

The board also forbade Ford to circularize his employes with anti-union literature, but this part of the order was rejected by the Circuit Court as violative of the free speech guaranty of the Constitution. The Supreme Court did not pass yesterday on this phase of the question.

The Ford company, which was recently denied a national defense contract because it would not promise to abide by all Federal and State labor legislation, now has Labor Board cases in lower courts in Buffalo, Dallas, and Long Beach, Calif. The board has issued orders against the company at Somerville, Mass., St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo., and has received complaints against the company's labor policy at the Chicago and Richmond, Calif., plants.

The court affirmed a decision upholding a 1939 West Virginia law which barred the operation of motor vehicles having two levels for the carriage of other vehicles.

Ford Will Comply

New York, Feb. 10 (AP).—A spokesman for the Ford Motor Co. said tonight that the company would comply with a Federal Court decree directing the company to reinstate 23 employes with back pay but reiterated the company's contention that it had not violated the law.

I. A. Capizzi, Detroit labor counsel for Ford, issued a statement on the Supreme Court's refusal to review a Circuit Court decision on a Labor Board ruling, saying:

"The action of the Supreme Court leaves in effect the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals upholding Mr. Ford's right of free speech, which the Circuit Court said was the most important issue in the case.

"The refusal of the Supreme Court to review the decision of the lower court on other points emphasized the limited scope of judicial review of the actions of the NLRB, and should give impetus to proposals pending in Congress to provide for wider court review and for drastic revisions of Labor Board procedure, which has been found by a Congressional committee to be grossly unfair."

"No Quibbling Now"

R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers, C. I. O., which has been conducting a drive to unionize workers in the Ford plant, said at Detroit:

"There can be no quibbling now. We look for immediate action by the Government to withhold further defense contracts from the Ford Motor Co. until it agrees to obey the law."

Michael F. Widman, jr., in direct charge of the U. A. W.-C. I. O. campaign to organize Ford workers, said:

"The Ford workers now have the protection of the highest court in the United States in their efforts to win a contract and collective bargaining rights."

House Votes Debt Limit Of 65 Billion

rejected, 168 to 105.

Treasury Secretary Morgenthau, who urged the speedy enactment of the legislation to meet the rising obligations of defense, has estimated that the $65,000,000,000 debt limit will meet this Nation's financial requirements until June, 1942.

The cost of the national defense program in 1941 and 1942 has been estimated at $28,500,000,000.

Representative Robertson (Democrat), of Virginia, asserted that present commitments would bring it up to $54,896,000,000.

Chairman Doughton, who piloted the bill through the House, urged the House not to delay the legislation because of its tie-up with national defense.

Several amendments were offered by Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, only so be removed on points of order or by overwhelming votes. Some of these wree called "inflationary" by committee members.

Patman sought to strike out the provisions for taking future Federal securities on the ground that the return would be small and that the action was but the first step toward national taxation of State, county and municipal bonds.

"It's just letting the camel get its nose under the tent," he warned.

Release of published hearings on the Treasury-Postoffice supply bill yesterday disclosed testimony of Secretary Morgenthau to the effect that he has no doubt of the solvency of the Government but hopes that taxes and other revenue will pay for at least one-third of the national defense program.

"The revenues of the Government would be at least great enough to pay all the ordinary expenses of the Government, including the actual maintenance of our Army and Navy," he said.

"I would like also to see a reasonable amount of revenue available so that each year we could retire a certain amount of obligations issued to provide funds for the national defense program.

"If Congress should write the ticket of two-thirds from borrowings and one-third from revenues, I would be delighted."

Twelve Acting Groups To Compete in Tourney

One-Act Play Competition Begins Feb. 27; 'March of Time' to Consider Foreign-Born; This, That and the Other About the Theater

IN FULFILLMENT of the warning given here some time since, registration books for the D. C. One-Act Play Tournament of 1941 have been closed. Twelve local acting groups have been accepted by the tournament committee and their choice of plays for the tourney has been approved by the play-reading committee, named by L. Zaff Rogers, general chairman.

BELL

The groups that will compete this year include the Buchanan PTA Drama Club, Census Bureau Dramatic Club, Covenant-Fellowship Dramatic Club, Falls Church Community Theater, FBI Recreation Association Theater Group, Interior Players, Masquers of Roosevelt Community Center, Pepconians, Players Club of Central Community Center, Pierce Hall Players, St. Paul's Players and the Troupers of East Washington Community Center.

The tournament will open in Roosevelt High School Auditorium on Thursday night, February 27, and will continue with three additional preliminary contests on Saturday, March 1; Tuesday, March 4, and Thursday, March 6. The finals are scheduled for Saturday night, March 8, also at Roosevelt High.

The tournament is sponsored by the Community Center and Playgrounds Department of the District of Columbia and is an annual fixture that has taken on increasing importance with the passing of the years.

The "March of Time" continues to discover topics of absorbing interest for its distinguished documentary releases within the borders of these fretful United States. Its next issue will bear the title of "Americans All!" and will reveal that during the past century almost 40,000,000 aliens have flocked to our shores and in what manner the foreign-born and the children of foreign-born have contributed toward building this Nation and making it the world's greatest democracy. It is well to remember at this juncture in national affairs that high in the councils of the Nation are many men who came to the United States as immigrants—men like Welsh-born United States Senator James J. Davis, German-born Robert F. Wagner, Austrian-born Justice Felix Frankfurter, Russian-born Sidney Hillman and Danish-born William S. Knudsen.

Catholic University's next dramatic offering, in case you have been wondering, will be "God's Stage," to be presented in the University Theater the evenings of February 26 through March 2. "God's Stage," excerpts from the world's drama stressing the Christian motif on the stage, was compiled by Walter Kerr, who also will direct the production. The cast will be composed of four men and five girls, all students of the University's Speech and Drama Department, under the directorship of Father Hartke.

And tonight at 10, following the final projection of "Queen of Destiny," beginning at 8:25, the Little Theater will present a public preview of the season's prodigious "sleeper," "Night Train," which will begin its regular engagement on Ninth Street tomorrow morning, with Margaret Lockwood and Rex Harrison in the leading roles. "Night Train" having skirted about the fringes of the Capital for days on end now, "preview" somehow seems not to be quite the word.

Time out for a few acknowledgments. Belated thanks to Frances Starr for her cordial note from New Haven and to Horace "Happy" Walker for his, from Oteen, N. C. And more of the same to Universal for the stucco ash tray—or was it a book-end?—and to the publishers for copies of Hemingway's "For Whom the Bell Tolls," Bess Streeter Aldrich's "Miss Bishop," the Lockridges' "Murder Out of Turn"—a possible new "Mr. and Mrs. North" comedy—the Saroyan plays and all the rest. They all have boosted the mileage on the early morning gas.

Sidney Lust will give a farewell party at his Hyattsville Theater tonight for the entire personnel of Company F, crack outfit of the First Maryland Regiment, National Guard, which has just been called for Federal service. Members of the company will participate in brief patriotic exercises beginning at 8:30, and then will view the complete evening performance of the Hyattsville's regular bill.

Signs-of-the-Times Note

If you had to do it, the story might be plucked from local marquees something as follows:

"BACK STREET"
("THIS THING CALLED LOVE," "GONE WITH THE WIND")

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Feb. 10.

Harry Rolnick and Ed Byer, who are to men's hats what John Frederics is to women's, flew in from Dallas, Tex., to do some new lids for Errol Flynn and John Payne, and Rolnick gave me an earful. Says you can tell a man by the kind of a hat he wears. (Aren't you glad that doesn't apply to women?) Says Mickey Rooney is as casual about his lid as he is about girls—prefers shaggy Tyrolean things which stand up under all kinds of weather and abuse. Clark Gable likes a soft felt he can fold up and stick in his pocket. Walter Pidgeon ditto.

HOPPER

Bob Hope's weakness for broad brims denotes a generous nature. And he considers Bing Crosby America's worst - hatted man. His crowns are too low for his face and he mixes colors which wouldn't blend even in a rainbow—but then everyone knows Bing is colorblind. His favorite is Menjou, who only wears a hat three or four times. But our No. 1 hat model is President Roosevelt, who knows at just what angle to tilt the new headgear, and wears out a great many—because tipping the lid is often hard on any brim.

Director Garson Kanin locked the last ten pages of script on "Tom, Dick and Harry" in the vault, and no one will know until the end of the picture which one gets Ginger. Can't you see George Murphy, Burgess Meredith, and Alan Marshall all paying her little attentions throughout the picture—with gifts, or perhaps even an apple a day?

If you missed Ida Lupino and Ronnie Colman's performance in "Rebecca" on the Lux show, it's too bad. They were superb. The little Lupino and Betty Field, who gives a grand performance in "Shepherd of the Hills," are pushing Bette Davis and Margaret Sullavan for first place. Properly cast, these girls will go far this year.

I hear Sam Wood wants Lupino for the girl in "King's Row." He'd like Tyrone Power for the idealistic doctor, and Charles Coburn as the sadistic, small-town medico who chops off legs just to see his patients suffer. With proper treatment and casting, "King's Row" can be the picture of the year.

Personally, I miss Oscar Levant frightfully on "Information Please," and after listening to his quips, no one could be more surprised than I to find that in fatherhood, he's completely conventional, worries like anything about his 16-week-old baby girl.

Also on "Kiss the Boys Goodbye" set, I found Barbara Jo Allen, who is Vera Vague. You've heard of split infinitives, but hers is a split personality. On the air she's a dizzy dame looking for a man. On the screen, she's the other woman—beautifully gowned, coiffed, hair the color of a raven. I asked her which was her real personality, and she said "Oh, I'm still looking for that!"

Wait till you see Claudette Colbert in a black chiffon gown over a nude colored foundation, with black velvet leaves anchored at just the right places. What a figure that gal's got! Never has to diet, and can even get her muzzle into a box of chocolates without showing it.

Take a good look at the settings in "Skylark"—they're exquisite. Twin beds are made of thin mahogany in scroll design.

It is not so much a conventional drama as a cross-section of the life of the world's "little people" that unfolds itself upon the stage of the National Theater this week. If, in "The Time of Your Life," William Saroyan ignores the usual rules of "plot" and the interrelationships of the characters in his play, to which audiences through long usage have become accustomed, he follows in distinguished footsteps. Jerome K. Jerome did more or less the same thing in his "Passing of the Third Floor Back" and a similar celebration of the impressive and inspired qualities of mind and heart of a dominant central figure was made the foundation of Otis Skinner's memorable "Mister Antonio." Other ancient analogies might be revived to absolve the daring and "revolutionary" Mr. Saroyan from charges of having blazed a completely new and uncharted course in the fashioning of "abstruse" and confusing drama.

There is nothing either abstruse or confusing in "The Time of Your Life" beyond its willingness to violate rock-ribbed procedures in achieving the spendid end of baring the modest ambitions, deep humanitarianism and fundamental goodness of simple people whose only aim is to live with grace, decency and a little dignity. And ideal setting has been chosen for the consummation of this well-nigh perfect reflection of the problems, trials and triumphs of persons untouched by the finger of fame and unmarked by the molds that shape distinguished destiny—Nick's Pacific Street Saloon, Restaurant and Entertainment Palace, at the foot of the Embarcadero, in San Francisco.

A Motley Crew on Parade

Through the pivoting portals of this dingy dump drift the dregs of a modern and maladjusted civilization. There is, primarily, the wealthy observer of the passing scene, in whose nature wells an enormous impulse to be helpful and kindly. Past his table, always incongruously and heavily burdened with champagne, move the victims of a frustrated and futile existence. There is this man Joe's personal idolator, whose life once he had saved with food, medicine and money; Kitty Duval, the plaintive prostitute, kept clean by the shining memories of the farm back in Ohio, where all of the family were together and life seemed something better than a sordid battle for something to eat and a place to sleep in contamination; the longshoreman, with the soul of an idealist and a poet; the cop on the beat, with an abiding hatred of his calling; the hoofer, intent only on becoming a great dancer and comedian; the colored piano player, whose talents are unmasked only by starvation; the vice squad officer, with the wizened soul of a house detective; the aged Arab, who perceives "No Foundation, all down the line"; the old plainsman, with his tales of magnificent accomplishment—if you will buy him drinks enough; the pin-ball addict, who discerns the salvation of the world and the supremacy of persistence in the winning of six nickels after hours of effort; the trained nurse, in disillusioned love, and as many more typical waterfront vagrants as you would care to name.

Out of this welter of obscure humanity, Saroyan has evolved a strangely moving, inspiring and vibrant drama. He has embellished it with the most commonplace, ribald and brilliantly illuminating touches—earthy, profane, homely and inspiring. He had employed music and the dance profusely to add to the overtones of comedy that mark a play that is basically profound and socially important. He has not been indifferent to the exalting lilts of poesy, the ribaldry of the gutter or the value of human contrasts that mark the opposite poles of the social order. He has, in short, contrived a piece that amply deserves the Pulitzer and Drama Critics' Circle prizes that have been bestowed upon it.

A Long and Luminous Cast

All of this perspicuity on the part of the author would have come to virtually naught without the interpretative skill of a cast that has been assembled with a judicious discretion that matches its length. Eddie Dowling, as the solicitous Joe, who salvages so many seemingly wasted or unguided lives, is shrewdly and almost misleadingly effective in everything he says and does. One almost assumes that his simulation of the ravages of locomotor ataxia is something actual and feels a thrill of gratification when he bounds out upon the stage to share in the uncounted curtain calls that greet his efforts and those of his able associates. Julie Haydon, in the role of Kitty Duval, the streetwalker with stardust in her hair, is equally an item for serious consideration in a less conspicious but comparably important part.

Fred Kelly, as the aspiring hoofer, has the most thankless assignment of any member of the cast. His individual efforts would arouse tumultuous enthusiasm, were they not always submerged in the more important movements of the play. And Reginald Beane's stint at the piano is another that should elicit most laudatory response, were it not similarly obscured. As Kit Carson, the loquacious plainsman, Arthur Hunnicutt, revives memories of the late Frank Bacon in "Lightning," whose Lightning Bill Jones will ever remain in memory as the high point in braggadoccio—which is as high a compliment as Mr. Hunnicutt could be paid.

All of the others in the cast aid appreciably in making "The Time of Your Life" everything the title implies in terms of enjoyment before the footlights.

Leonard Lyons:

New York, Feb. 10.

11 P. M.: "Three hundred invitations a day to aid national defense now are coming into our office in Washington," Lawrence Langner, secretary of the National Investors Council, states at Sardi's. Langner, who with Tom Midgely and Conway Coe, the commissioner of patents, founded the council, explains: "From 4 to 5 per cent are worth looking into, and one in a thousand will be accepted" . . . "Mayor Kelly of Chicago brought his own script when he broadcast with us. He didn't know we had one all prepared," George Burns and Gracie Allen confide at Leone's. "One of Kelly's gags was: 'In New York you have a curb-your-dog law. Out here we haven't. We have trees' " . . . At Toots Shor's Jock Whitney, who once backed Abe Simon, tells Jimmy Cannon: "I hope Abe isn't matched against Joe Louis. I don't want to see him get hurt." Ten minutes later Ray Arcel, the fight second, enters and tells Cannon: "I hope Simon gets the Louis fight. He needs the money."

LYONS

1 A. M.: "I used to be the personal musician to Machado, the late Cuban dictator," Band Leader Maya declares at the Havana Madrid. "One day, after Machada returned from a political execution, he said he needed soothing. I shuddered, but had to obey—so I played 'Some of These Days' and prayed that it would be prophetic" . . . "When the Boston officials refused to permit Lois Andrews Jessel to perform in a night club because she was only 16," a ringsider reports at the Versailles, "Jessel said: 'They should have taken our average ages. Then there'd be enough for two jobs—or maybe three".

2 A. M.: "Garbo dined here with two friends," the head waiter declares at the St. Regis. "She had only a salad. Luise Rainer, who is almost half the size of Garbo, was here, too, and she had a shrimp cocktail, filet mignon, potatoes, salad and rich dessert" . . . "I told Saroyan about a character I knew, and Bill wrote him into his new play," Artie Shaw relates at the Stork Club. "He's a rain-bringer, indoors or outdoors. In Saroyan's play he brings rain down from the ceiling of the drawing room and tells the guests, 'The avocado plant was dying of thirst' ".

3 A. M.: "So Weintraub's now a suldger in the Armee," a barstandee states at Zimmerman's Budapest. "Which Weintraub?" his companion asks. "You know," he's told. "Weintraub Rockefellah" . . . "Everett Wile, who's producing 'Five-Alarm Waltz,' says that Darryl Zanuck is the most class-conscious figure in Hollywood," a publicist reports at the Queen Mary. "He was in Zanuck's office, with its perfect air-cooling. The outer office, where subordinates work, was much warmer. And the office boy's room was the warmest of all. That's true class-consciousness" .

4 A. M.: At George White's Gay White Way a waiter drops some checks he has been holding. Jack Gilford, of "Meet the People," rushes to pick them up and returns them, explaining: "At last. I always dreamed that some day, for a change, I'd give a check to a waiter" . . . Geraldine Spreckles, of the sugar family, just came back to town," a show girl informs at the Village Barn. "She saw 'Panama Hattie' and during the intermission she went backstage to the dressing room of the girls with whom she used to work. Geraldine seated herself in front of the theatrical mirror, drew out her compact and sighed: 'This is the only place where I can make up properly' " . . . "We don't send out a road company of 'Arsenic and Old Lace' until we get someone for the Boris Karloff role," Coproducer Russel Crouse reports at Barney Gallant's. "I wish we could perform a Karloff horror operation on Boris to split him in two so we can have two Karloffs—one for the road show."

5 A. M.: "Stewart Chaney, the scenic designer," a producer informs at Reuben's, "is in the Army now . . . "The Corcoran Gallery in Washington has shown some of my paintings," Paul Meltzner, who will paint Eleanor Roosevelt, states at Benny Leonard's. "But for the Corcoran exhibit next month they won't accept my portrait of Marian Anderson, and I consider it my best work" . . . "When Gabriel Pascal was making the movie of G. B. Shaw's 'Major Barbara' in England they found a London street as the perfect location for one scene," a film executive relates in Lindy's. "They shot some scenes there. When they returned the next day for additional shooting the street was gone—bombed . . . Incidentally, Pascal can confirm this—Shaw has contributed practically his entire fortune of almost $4,000,000 to the British government."

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Feb. 10 (INS).—Bob Leonard's new contract and next picture, "Two Women," gave rise to considerable discussion on the M.-G.-M. lot. Can two top glamour girls share honors and be happy? One of the M.-G.-M. biggies doubted that such a movie could be made without a lot of grief and jealousy over footage and camera angles. But not Bob, or Pop, as he is affectionately known. "Of course it can be done," said Bob, "for actresses today are above petty jealousies. All they want is a good picture."

PARSONS

I'll say for Bob if anyone can keep the girls speaking, he will be the one for after 17 years on the same lot he knows how to handle M.-G.-M. temperaments.

A combination that will sizzle at the box-office, if the deal now pending goes through, is that of George Raft and Marlene Dietrich in "Handle With Care." Can't you just see those two emoting with the cameras trained on them? As I told you the other day, Universal and Marlene will definitely say goodby when she finishes her contract—one more picture.

Brilliant young Richard English leaves his Hollywood stint to go to South America on a writing job for Colliers. met him the other eve and he told me that he had just completed a story for M-G-M—"I Want You." The plot revolves around a girl on an advertisement poster. Just as we were talking in walked Lana Turner and Tony Martin. "She is the girl I would like and he is the boy who should play in my story."

I told David Selznick, when he said that he would use Joan Fontaine, Katherine Hepburn or Vivien Leigh in the role of "Jane Eyre, that the fans would consider it their duty to do the casting for him. Well, they have, to the tune of at least 50 letters a day to this writer. So far, Joan Fontaine leads in a walk. She is about 65 per cent favorite with Katie Hepburn second with 25 per cent, and Vivien Leigh bringing up the rear.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Wilma Francis will seek a divorce this week from Leon Janney, youthful actor who has become famous on the radio; Richard Halliday will adopt Mary Martin's little boy, which is very nice; the Johnny Weissmullers are battling again—and this time a reconciliation doesn't look too hopeful; wagers are on that Addison Randall will make up with Mrs. Marcus Daly, his rich girl friend, now that he has obtained his divorce; talk is that Ellen Drew and Cy Bartlett will wed before the end of the year.

Richard Greene writes that he is making defense shorts and doing his Army training at the same time. He also says David Niven is with the Brass Hats—assistant to an admiral; Mischa Auer, minus that dashing mustache, stepping out with Joyce Hunter; Norma Shearer, looking really wonderful after her Sun Valley vacation, at Jean and Charlie Feldman's supper party. Talked with Kay Francis—and maybe I am wrong, but she has that love light in her eyes again—and chatter is that the reason is Ivan Goff.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

R. A. F. Raids Reich, Coast Ports by Day

By the Associated Press

London (Tuesday), Feb. 11.—Taking advantage of the clearest, calmest day of the year, British bombers yesterday raided northwest Germany in broad daylight, then returned for three successive raids on Boulogne, Dunkerque and Calais.

The air ministry, in a communique issued early today, said the raids on the three French ports "were not on a large scale, but full reports show the bombing of docks and shipping was most effective."

Yesterday's daylight raid on Germany and German-occupied territory was the first the ministry had reported and, combined with the thrice-repeated attacks on the French ports, suggested that springtime initiative in war would not be left exclusively to the Axis.

All British aircraft returned safely from the "successful" daylight raid, the communique said. Three fighters were missing after the later flight over Boulogne, Dunkerque and Calais.

(Berlin sources said the British lost seven planes during the attack on Dunkerque and that one more was destroyed over Germany.)

Blenheim bombers of the R. A. F., escorted by strong fighter formations, dumped "tons" of bombs on the three ports in occupied France, the air ministry reported, and scored direct hits "all over the target area."

Fires Seen Raging

"Very little opposition" was encountered, the ministry said, but two German fighters definitely were shot down and possibly a third.

Boulogne and Dunkerque were attacked simultaneously, and Calais later, the air ministry reported, and "when the Boulogne raid was over six large fires could be seen raging across the harbor."

"One big dockside building received two direct hits."

The air ministry news service described the raid on Calais docks as "even more successful" than the attack on Boulogne, and said bombs "showered on many parts of the harbor." Other hits, it said, were scored on harbor buildings, and a dockside railroad was hit directly.

The ministry quoted one pilot as saying:

"I watched bombs explode and could see their bursts lift shipping clean out of the water. We could see the bottoms of small craft as they overturned and fell back completely wrecked."

Polish hurricane fighters were credited with shooting down two Messerschmitt 109's over Dunkerque.

Italy to Be Target

The raid, which came the day after Prime Minister Churchill's assertion that Britain controls the air in the daytime, followed upon ministry announcements of damage inflicted on a German destroyer off Norway yesterday and additional pre-dawn attacks on northwestern Germany.

Coupled with these intensified attacks came assertions from high military quarters that Italy herself is Britain's military objective in the Mediterranean.

"Bombs, shells and more bombs and shells," will be rained on the Italian peninsula from Brindisi to Turin, the informants said, in the wake of yesterday's attack by the fleet and its air arm on Genoa.

It was held likely that a close port, perhaps Valona, toward which the Greeks are pushing in Albania, would have to be obtained by the British before actual invasion of Italy could be attempted.

Ideal flying weather brought only scattered German raiders over England last night.

A single raider swept low over an East Anglian town and dropped explosive bombs, destroying one house but with no casualties reported.

with Il Duce can have consequences of the greatest importance.

There are two principal suppositions worthy of consideration. The first is that a proposal to bring Spanish support to the Axis at the moment when Italy is meeting with reverses in her every field of action could be the object of the conversations.

There was every indication that during Hitler's talk with Gen. Franco in October and again during Serrano Suner's visit to Berlin, this whole question was under discussion. The failure of Spain to act when the Axis was successful everywhere would lessen the chances of acceptance now. And the fact that Gen. Franco is the visitor too would not tend to substantiate the theory that Italy were the demander.

Another supposition could be that Gen. Franco is serving as an intermediary and that some sort of negotiations may have been opened between Italy and Great Britain. Spain has consistently served as the means of communication between Great Britain and enemy states.

During the negotiations of France for an armistice with Germany, Spain played an important role in transmitting the German and the French reply which passed through Ambassador to France Jose Felix de La Querica. La Querica has just arrived in Vichy after a visit to Paris. Since the breaking of diplomatic relations between France and Great Britain, the United States was supposed to take charge of relations between the two countries but the delays of communication became too great and Great Britain named Sir Samuel Hoare to act as transmission agent in Madrid.

At a time when Italy is hard pressed by the British in Libya and Ethiopia, when Italian cities are being bombed by the British fleet, and when the situation in Albania remains precarious, is a moment when Spain could well serve as a useful friend. The Spanish government is indebted to Mussolini for his assistance to Gen. Franco's cause during the Spanish civil war and would certainly not miss an opportunity to be useful to him now.

72 Killed, 226 Hurt in Genoa, Italy Reports

By Herbert L. Matthews

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Feb. 10.—Seventy-two people were killed and 226 wounded in the shelling of Genoa yesterday morning by the British fleet, it was announced in today's war bulletin.

This is the greatest casualty list of any bombardment from the sea or air since the war began, and it is indicated that the full casualties have not yet been ascertained.

This has been the most terrible single attack that the Italian mainland has yet suffered and it has caused an enormous sensation. Virginio Gayda, Fascist spokesman, says today that Italy will have her revenge for that.

The communique says that the British fleet approached Genoa "favored by a dense fog." "Notwithstanding the prompt intervention of the royal navy's coastal batteries," it goes on to say, "the enemy's salvoes, which hit no object of a military character, killed 72 and wounded 226 thus far ascertained among the population, as well as causing huge damage to civilian habitations. The calm and discipline of the Genoese population was beyond praise.

"One of our air formations caught the enemy ships in the afternoon, hitting a cruiser in the stern with a bomb.

"British planes made some raids on Leghorn and the suburbs of Pisa, where no damage was done. In Leghorn an enemy plane was shot down by our antiaircraft."

For the whole of Africa, with all its sectors, the communique curiously enough only mentions one place, and it so happens that the British themselves have not mentioned it yet—the oasis of Cufra in the southeastern part of Libya, where it is stated, "An enemy mechanized column was put to flight." Cufra is the center of a network of caravan trails and hamlets.

Signor Gayda mentions the Genoa bombardment in the course of a long answer to Prime Minister Churchill's speech. The Italian public has not been allowed to read anything of Churchill's scathing and barbed remarks, but other parts of the speech are carefully summarized with polemics and denials interspersed and it is this portion which Signor Gayda answers.

The prime minister is deceiving the American public and trying to calm the doubts about the United States being able to keep out of the war, writes Signor Gayda, who thereupon says he will answer Churchill by citing Senator Burton K. Wheeler.

The editorial is by no means Signor Gayda at his best, but it is typical of the reaction here which cannot be strong, because the strongest parts of Churchill's speech are ignored.

Electric Autos Appear in Paris

Paris (Via Berlin), Feb. 6 (Delayed) (AP).—Small automobiles powered by batteries which can be recharged by plugging into an electric wall socket have appeared on Paris streets. They can travel about 70 miles before recharging is necessary and have a top speed of about 25 miles an hour.

There is great demand in Paris for transportation to replace taxis, which have been banned owing to the gasoline shortage.

Wings For The Guard

All properly patriotic Washingtonians will be glad to learn that the District National Guard has been assured a Federally recognized aviation unit by the provision of a field and hangar. Any community should be proud of the knowledge that its own soldiery has an opportunity for larger service to the Nation. However, for the defense of the District itself—one argument last month in an unsuccessful plea to the Commissioners for funds—the necessity for the facilities is doubtful. To a large extent air defense is based at a distance from the point it is expected to defend. As for the 121st Observation Squadron, we may view it with proper pride, but not as an arm to protect the city. In wartime it will be attached to the corps and may be stationed anywhere without reference to its origin.

Germans First

Some idea of the way that German living standards have improved since the Nazis conquered half Europe is available in a table published by the New York Herald Tribune. The German bread ration is higher than that of any other captive nation except Holland. And Holland's is only a shade higher. More meat is allowed to the Germans than to any of the others except the Dutch, and the Dutch are on a par with the Germans. This applies all the way down the line except in fats, and in this respect the Norwegians have the biggest allowance.

The fact is, of course, that the Germans have replenished themselves at captive expense. From Holland in particular the booty was considerable, and the thrifty Dutch were deprived of 99 per cent of their butter reserves. According to the Herald Tribune table, however, the Dutch still are on a footing with the Germans in their ration of fats. But there are reports that the Dutch have difficulty in getting their full ration allotment. Be this as it may, clearly the weapon of the ration may be decisive in persuading Dutch workers to migrate to Germany, as they are doing in number.

Worst off are the Poles. Poland happens to have been, of all these countries, the largest producer of food, with average harvests far in excess of requirements. But Poland now serves Germany not only out of its surplus but out of its own normal sustenance. For instance, the Germans in Poland get 14 ounces of white bread a day, whereas the Poles are allowed only nine ounces of brown bread. The meat ration for the Poles is about a fifteenth of the German; sugar, a fourth; fats, a half.

The fact is that the Poles have already been proclaimed a lower race. And a lower race, as Dr. Ley, head of the labor front, said last January, "needs less room, less clothing, less food, and less culture than a higher race." What has happened to the Poles will no doubt happen to the other captives as time goes on. The herrenfolk must be served. As the economics minister, Dr. Funk, declared last July 25, "The peacetime economy of Europe must guarantee to the Great German Reich the maximum of economic security and to the German people a maximum consumption of goods, in order to increase the welfare of the people. European economics must be directed to this end."

Howard Heinz

Howard Heinz, who died in Philadelphia Sunday night, was the head of an international food business which started, in a typically American manner, when his father hired three persons to carry out an original idea. The son entered the factory in 1900 as a clerk, and worked his way to the top. Howard Heinz was a distinguished businessman, who in 1934 attained the chairmanship of the National Industrial Conference Board. Yet the knowledge gained in business he exercised in the wider field of public service. Perhaps his most notable work for his fellow man was done after World War I as director general of the American Relief Administration for Southeastern Europe and Asia Minor—a position similar to that of Herbert Hoover for Northern Europe. Mr. Heinz, with all his business both public and private, found time to enrich his personal life. When Albert Einstein attended a convention of scientists in Pittsburgh in 1934, he spent more time with Mr. Heinz than he did with his fellow savants. That should be a good measure of this well rounded businessman.

Action At Genoa

The Italians had not even begun to recover from the shock of losing Bengasi when the horrors of war were brought home to them even more directly by the British naval bombardment of Genoa at dawn Sunday. That was as spectacular a naval venture as this war has yet seen. It was, in the first place, no mean accomplishment in itself for the western Mediterranean fleet under Vice Admiral Sir James Somerville to penetrate Italian waters as far north as the Riviera. Then the raid emphasized the mastery which the British exercise in what the Fascists have boastfully called "Mare Nostrum"—our sea. It also revealed the incredible weakness of Italian defenses, sea, land and air. More than 300 tons of shells were rained on Italy's chief seaport and fourth largest city, yet the only British casualty throughout the entire operation was one missing plane.

Winston Churchill in his address suggested that the Axis had planned to use Genoa as a base from which to launch an expedition to attack French North Africa. That was certainly not beyond the bounds of possibility in view of the opposition displayed by Marshal Petain to Hitler's reported demands for the cession of Bizerte and the use of the French fleet against the British. British naval might has now demonstrated the risk of such an undertaking, and it may also have brought home to the French, as Churchill indicated, that "friends, active friends, are near and that Britannia rules the waves." More than in any other theater of the war, as a matter of fact, sea power remains important in the Mediterranean. Lacking it in sufficient quantity to challenge the British, the Italians found themselves under tremendous handicaps when they prepared for an attack on Alexandria and the Suez Canal. British naval superiority hampered Graziani's force when, after the fall of Bengasi, they were put on the defensive. And the same factor may play a decisive role in eliminating the Italians from Libya altogether.

Nor has airpower, whether Italian or German, made any change in the situation. The "very significant air action over Malta" which Churchill referred to in his address suggests that, in the Mediterranean at least, air power has its limitations in offensive operations when a proper degree of coordination exists between the land batteries, ships and planes of the defenders. Of the 150 German dive bombers thrown into the attack, 90, says Churchill, were destroyed.

The exploit at Genoa is vividly interesting for its revelation of the lack of Italian seapower at home. What was the Italian navy doing all this time while Genoa and its surrounding territory were being bombarded? The answer is simple. It continued to stay in hiding, unwilling to venture out to risk battle with the enemy. The bombardment of Genoa suggests that the days of its immunity (an immunity, incidentally, achieved at a great price in severance of communications between Italy and her empire) are at an end. What the British fleet did at Genoa it may repeat elsewhere along the Italian coast, including the hideaways of the Italian fleet.

Rumania On Notice

The British are no longer content to wait fatalistically on events. They are not going to sit by with hands folded while Hitler spreads his tentacles over additional portions of the Balkan peninsula. Churchill's warning to Bulgaria last Sunday not to repeat the mistake of the last war when she found herself on the losing side is an indication of this British attitude. Now the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Rumania is another. The Bucharest government is being as good as told that Great Britain will not hesitate to take action against Rumania if Hitler uses that nation as a base for new aggressions. And from bases now in their control in Greece the R. A. F. can fight back and fight back effectively. In voluntarily becoming a captive nation Rumania has not thereby spared herself the grim potentialities of belligerency.

Labor Bottlenecks

When the defense program was launched, this country had abnormally large reserves of unemployed labor upon which industry could draw as production expanded. However, as early as last October the United States Employment Service reported shortages of machinists, tool and die makers, skilled metal workers and shipbuilding craftsmen had become acute. Shortages in other occupations (particularly in the aircraft industry) were also widespread. As the defense work progresses, these difficulties will become increasingly formidable. For instance, it is estimated that the aircraft industry alone will need more than 250,000 additional workers by next August if production goes on according to schedule.

Unfortunately the "all round" mechanic of the type upon which the aircraft industry has heretofore relied has acquired requisite skill and versatility only after years of intensive training. There is not time to give such thorough preparation to the hundreds of thousands of men needed to produce airplanes, ships and other equipment called for by the defense program. Accordingly the Defense Commission is asking industrial managements to do two things: break down highly skilled operations into parts and retrain men on the job for these simplified tasks.

Field organizations established to acquaint industry with the fundamentals of this training program are already functioning in 16 out of the 22 districts into which the country has been divided. These district organizations are headed by experts in personnel work borrowed from private industry who are aided by representatives of organized labor and management. The "training within industry" method of relieving skilled labor shortages should facilitate the use of mass-production methods by defense industries and help to eliminate labor bottlenecks that might otherwise hold back defense preparations.

Smoot Of Utah

Reed Smoot's appearance in the Senate in 1903 brought a storm of protest that swirled about his head for a year. Thirty years later another storm swept him out of office, but in the meantime he had won the respect of all and the admiration of many. Particularly through the Coolidge and Hoover Administrations, the veteran Senator from Utah was recognized as a sort of institution in Washington.

As co-author of the Smoot-Hawley tariff Act, Mr. Smoot is widely known as the "high priest of protectionism." That sobriquet falls short, however, of doing him full justice. He was a stout advocate of tariffs which he believed to be advantageous to American industry and agriculture, and he played the role of Republican wheelhorse in putting Administration bills through Congress. In the Senate Finance Committee over which he presided, however, he often fought for moderate duties on imports.

Mr. Smoot's greatest claim to distinction as a Senator arises from the boundless energy he put into his work and his detailed knowledge of the Federal Government. On questions of Government finance, revenue and appropriations, he was a walking encyclopedia. It was customary for him to be on his feet for many hours a day when appropriations bills were under discussion in the Senate. It is doubtful whether any other American has ever stored in his mind more detailed information regarding the Government and its operations than did Mr. Smoot.

Thirty years in the Senate did not detract from his simplicity of manner or the kindliness that was often concealed by his austere countenance. Nor did it weaken the ardor of his religious faith. Mr. Smoot never allowed himself to forget that he was a high official of the Mormon Church. And sometimes his role as churchman took precedence over his role as legislator, as when he dramatically interrupted the debate on the World War resolution to utter a fervent prayer for divine guidance of the Senate.

Alice Underground

The words of an adult in describing the effect of Lewis Carroll on a child's mind are necessarily awkward and inappropriate. All that most of us can recall is that, if we were introduced early to Alice in Wonderland, we acquired something of pleasure and beauty which has lasted all our lives. That should be enough to make us grown-ups note the performance of Alice next Saturday morning at the National Theater by the Children's Theater of New York. Primarily for adults is the thought that this performance carries a special significance at this time. For if Alice's adventures underground were make-believe, there are children today who are so living—the thousands of children in London. Yet it is not unreasonable to suppose that the same light-hearted element in the English spirit which found such a choice outlet in the nonsense of Lewis Carroll is helping to sustain them now. No more real, perhaps, but more substantial is the help which has been forwarded for their relief as a result of the Christmas benefit play given here last December by the Children's Theater. The receipts, $1,700, are being sent to England to aid people in the stricken areas.

WHITE WORLD

Down in this glass, milk frosted in my hand,
There lives a small, still world, a strange white land
With ground and sky frost-pure and trees so white
That white becomes monotonous delight
Till even the roots are white, the branches thinned
And thickened, split to twigs on a snowy wind
That blows asunder white balls from the firs.
There, hanging sun-bespangled, faintly stirs,
Clear as the shining glass, a wavy line
Of icicles. I see a snowbird shine,
And in my hand holding a milky glass
Feel the world turn and watch the blizzard pass.

The Aftermath

I wish to draw attention to one sentence in the last paragraph of Mr. Harold Laski's article in The Post of February 8 which sounds a note all too seldom struck, and which, if true, should ease the minds of many in this country who fear that aid to Britain may lead to another Versailles Treaty of hatred and vindictiveness, sure to sow the seeds of future wars. Mr. Laski says, speaking of his village hero, W. P., "And when he has given Britain victory and the help to win, none will be able to persuade him and his kind to vengeance: Respect for other human beings is the cardinal principle of his life."

How to insure that this "cardinal principle" will prevail at the peace conference is the big problem. How can we be sure that the W. P.'s will even be represented there, though it is they who are doing the fighting and sacrificing. I could wish that Mr. Laski would enlarge on this point in a future article.

Too Many Managers

I am wondering if all this uproar about the bill 1776 is not a tempest in a teapot. I have read the bill and for the life of me can see nothing particularly objectionable. Nothing that a farmer would not give a manager in charge if a menace to the whole farming industry was in the vicinity, or that a manager of a store would not be given if all such stores were threatened, or that the manager of a factory would not be given if the whole industry were threatened.

Everyone knows that no one wants a half dozen managers, let alone 500, if you want anything done.

And why worry about a time limit or great power? Doesn't Congress know that that bill can be repealed at any time that two-thirds of them are convinced that the President is abusing the power given him? ARNETT HARBAGE.

Poison Gas In War

It is generally assumed that poison gas as an effective weapon in modern warfare was used for the first time in World War I. However, for historical records indicate that poison gas fired from cannon was used in war more than four centuries earlier.

Although the use of irritant and poisonous substances is probably as old as organized warfare—indeed, in the Peloponnesian War, according to Thucydides, the Athenians and Spartans employed suffocating gases produced from burning sulphur and pitch—in siege operations against fortified towns, it appears that the Venetians were the first to employ cannon for the discharge of poison gas.

In the centuries preceding the discovery of America, Venice was not only the leading sea power, but the Venetians were also outstanding as the builders of implements of war, particularly cannon. At the same time, the Venetians developed the art of poisoning in the political field, which came to be referred to as poison-diplomacy. Poisoning was then naturally transferred by them from the diplomatic to the military sphere. Hence, as Prof. Heinrich Kretschmayr points out in his great work on the history of Venice, in the second war of Ferrara, from 1482 to 1484, the Venetians employed against their enemies cannon with "poison smoke."

"Informed Understanding"

"As we entered the Great War 24 years ago, we proceeded by emotion rather than by informed understanding." This statement by Mark Sullivan carries with it entirely too smugly the implication that we made a mistake in letting emotions affect our decision in early 1917. It seems high time that the nonsense that we decided hastily and emotionally, and hence wrongly, in 1917 was unmistakably pointed out. May I inquire just where we would now have been, in view of the extreme closeness of the decision in the last war, had we endured long and tedious inquiries by Congressional committees throughout the spring and summer of 1917? What would have been the effect on our beloved country, and our way of life, if we had listened all summer to the unbacked opinions of men eminent in their own domain (and both nationally and internationally known) on matters of which they knew nothing whatever?

Is this an "informed understanding?" Are we quite sure that emotional guidance in human affairs is necessarily worse than "informed understanding," especially when time is taken into account? When rescue work is involved, time is of the essence and long palaver, disguised as "informed understanding," is the certain enemy of successful action.

I was living in England in August, 1914, and saw at close range the use by the Asquith-Grey government of emotion in order to get the rank and file behind the war which they declared on August 4. You will recall that they said it was necessary because of a Belgium violated and a "scrap of paper." They knew, as did most people of intelligence, that this was not correct; but the setting up of a parliamentary committee to arrive at "informed understanding" and then to spread their conclusions convincingly to the entire people would certainly have finished the British Empire in 1914. Mr. Sullivan is confusing the necessity for a government (or a general or a business leader) to arrive promptly through a few leaders, or only one, at "informed understanding" without emotionalism; but if we want democracy to survive, we might as well allow our leaders to lead us promptly to desirable ends from the intelligent application of mass emotion.

I am all for an after-the-war forum to explain to all who will listen what we think our actions have or have not accomplished so as to prevent a recurrence of that admitted disillusionment we have suffered from. Act now, and explain later. It is time to stop the cool and unwarranted assumption that because our entry into the last war was a rather emotional one that it was a wrong one. We did save our way of life, our liberty and all that makes life worth living to most of us. Perhaps that is all we got out of it; but wasn't that quite enough, and all we expect to get out of our present program of "all aid to Britain?"

Deferment Of Students

I think Brig. Gen. Hershey's talk at the Mayflower February 7, regarding the deferment of students, was deplorable, especially as it comes from one of the heads of the Selective Service. Has Brig. Gen. Hershey no regard for the future of our country? If college education is to be interrupted by the draft, who will fill the intellectual needs of our country in the future?

Higher education is the greatest need in the world today, for higher education creates understanding and tolerance. The young man who is trying to obtain an education in any field in order to assume the great responsibilities which will be his in the future is just as patriotic as the man who shoulders a rifle. Those who cry "class distinction" when deferment is asked for students are on a par with those who are trying to break down the American standards. Every young man who is conscientiously giving all his time to education should be cheerfully given deferment.

Those in authority are short-sighted indeed if they do not see that education is patriotic and necessary, and should not be interrupted. We must have lawyers, doctors, teachers and scientists, as well as military men. I quote an article by the Associated Press:

"Spokane, Wash., Jan. 21.—Dr. Paul Lee Sieg, president of the University of Washington, said yesterday he considered the United States would be pursuing a short-sighted policy if it takes university students from school to serve in the Army.

"'National defense is more than mere man power—the training of men to shoot guns. We need leadership more than anything. . . . I am not asking special consideration for these young men, except the consideration the Government owes itself.'"

There are many thousands of young men who have no desire to continue their education, and many who have completed their education. Surely there is no harm in asking that the Government be wise enough to select them first. The students do not object to having the military training, but they have a right to ask that they be allowed to finish their education first.

Asks Full Reasons For Lend-Lease

Are the readers of The Post to face the facts with respect to the lend-lease bill? It seems to me that they should, for the safest policy in a democracy is to reveal all the facts. The purpose of this letter is to ask for more facts and more facts specifically with regard to the motivation behind the lend-lease bill.

The arguments in favor of the bill as given by its proponents are too well known to be repeated here. To a person who has given some thought to matters of this kind the justification for the bill seems oversimple and incomplete. It seems as if the Administration is not telling the whole story. I would think the whole story should be told. If the whole motivation is what I think it is, I would guess that the full set of reasons for the program will be very popular.

To say that Britain will win if the bill is passed and will lose if it is not does not seem to be true in either particular. I doubt very much if the Administration believes that Britain will win or lose, using these words in the most decisive sense. What I would like to know is: What sort of outcome of this war is regarded by the Administration as both possible and desirable? Peace at any price is not to be desired, and annihilation of the foe is out of the question. The recent frequently repeated statement that "to win the war" is Britain's war objective will not satisfy thoughtful Americans.

What is it that we are afraid of if Hitler wins over Great Britain? I doubt if we are told in clear language. We are told that bombers can be constructed which can fly from Europe to America, drop a load of bombs, and return to Europe on one nonstop flight. While I cannot deny this statement—in fact, I accept it is as true—I doubt if we are really very much concerned over Hitler's bombers bombing American cities.

Probably most of us dismiss the thought of Hitler bombing American cities with the thought that we can do the equivalent amount of bombing ourselves. There is something we are afraid of other than bombings. The Administration should be specific on this.

There is talk of competition and loss of trade. The analysis that has been given us on this point is not very satisfactory. If we were primarily concerned with building up our foreign trade we would look with some satisfaction to the elimination of Great Britain. If we could take over the trade of Great Britain, or a considerable part of it, in a competitive, selfish sense we would gain through a Nazi victory. We could also take over some new territory. Apparently we are not primarily and immediately desirous of gaining new trade and territory.

To answer that to defeat Hitler and to picture Hitler as the embodiment of force, aggression and lust for power has meaning but loses a great deal of its force when the history of England and France is recalled. Such an argument has always been used by both sides during a war period and practically forgotten after peace is declared.

What is it that the Administration is so deeply interested in preserving or gaining? I hope the answer will be forthcoming in specific terms, not vague, pleasant-sounding generalities.

You're In The Army Now!

DEAR BUD:

Received your recent letter and am glad to hear you have enlisted, because, having been in the Army myself, I know the benefits of same to young men when it comes to character building and things like that. Anyhow, I know I had some great times and I know you will, too.

I guess the real reason I joined up was because my best buddy joined up, and anyhow he got me all excited about the fun we would have and stuff like that. I remember I liked it, too, the day we left for camp with the band playing and people standing along the curb watching us. I still remember how my feet hurt that first day but I didn't seem to mind, because I was all pepped up, from the music, I guess.

Well, anyhow, we finally reached camp, just like you have now. I wasn't so pepped up then, and my feet really hurt, but all the same we had to keep right on marching, feet or no feet. One thing I want to kind of warn you about, Bud, is tricks. Old soldiers love to play all kinds of jokes on the new kids, just like they did on me, and I guess they have on you by this time.

Don't ever sit down hard on your bunk, because you're liable to find out that somebody has unfastened your bunk for you. That reminds me of one time right after we got into camp. We were going to go on a hike for three days on a problem. We all went down to chow in the morning and left our packs on our bunks. I didn't get through eating until late that morning and when I did finish, I had to run to get my pack on and line up in front of the barracks with the rest of the outfit.

Well, I guess you can imagine how I hurried because of everybody being in line except me, so I ran up and grabbed my pack. The bunk almost tripped me—some guy had tied my pack to the bunk, which made me later than ever. When I did get into line and everybody was standing real still at attention, all of a sudden my pack drops from my back. All over the ground was my underclothing and soap and toothbrush and things like that.

The captain turned a sort of blue-green, because just then we had to do a squads right. Anyhow, the top sergeant let me step out of line and pick up everything. Even then I had to run like the devil, with my arm full of that junk and trying to carry my rifle, to catch up with the rest of my outfit.

I never did understand why that top sergeant kept after me, because after all you can clearly understand that it was not my fault that I got in that mess. Anyhow he made me go on kitchen police the next day. This is just one example of how sometimes people are unjust in the Army, but I guess you will find that out all by yourself.

That night we camped out in the woods in a meadow in a little valley and because nobody told me and my buddy about digging a little trench around our pup tents, we almost drowned. I don't know if you have had to sleep in one of those two-by-four tents or not, but if you do you will understand what I mean. They are just big enough to get two men's head and shoulders into, and that leaves your feet sticking out in the cold.

Well, it began to rain and the water came in under our tent in little streams. I was awful tired and didn't care what happened, if only I could get some sleep, because besides walking all day long I had to peel potatoes when we got back in camp. So, like I said, I wanted to sleep something awful and didn't care what happened.

The water kept getting deeper and deeper, and I found it was not going to let me sleep, so I put down all my clean pants and clothes to sop up the water, but that didn't do any good either. When I went out to look for some place else to sleep, I saw the cook who asked me how I would like a nice, hot cup of coffee. I said I couldn't think of anything I would like better. He pulled out an ax from behind his back and said well, I would have to chop wood if I wanted some. That is the way those people do, so you have to always be on your guard against them.

That is one thing I found out about the Army—people are always trying to get out of work and will work harder trying to get out of work then if they did the work.

Anyhow, I guess the best thing I can tell you is to do, like the old Army saying—breathe through your nose and never volunteer and you will be all right.

Please write soon and let me know if you run into any trouble that my Army experience can help clean up. Aunt Mary sends her love to you as well as two pairs of socks which are in another package.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Master Key

THERE IS A STORY told about Col. Lindbergh after his flight to Europe which all of us might well take to heart these days when we are trying to shape our policy by estimating and predicting the course of the war. The story, as I recall it, is that Col. Lindbergh had crossed the coast of Ireland within two miles of the point which he had aimed at, and he was being congratulated for having accomplished what was in those days a marvelous feat of navigation. He was said to have replied to his admirers: "To have come within 25 miles was navigation; to have come within two miles was navigation and good luck." This story, which ought to be true even if it is not, was more than an example of engaging modesty. It expresses the great human truth, especially relevant to this war, that a man who sails on the right course will proceed towards his destination but just how exactly he will get there is not calculable in advance.

LIPPMANN

The crucial question is for us to learn to distinguish among all the navigators—that is to say all the public men, the professional military men, and the experts—those who have thus far sailed a true course, have seen in essentials, not in every specific detail to be sure, the actual development of the war. And if we can distinguish the prophets from the mistaken prophets, we may even discover what it is that they understand about this war which the mistaken prophets have not understood.

LET US PASS BY all the unhappy political prophets of the pre-war era—those who did not think there would be a war, those who thought Hitler would fight Russia, and so forth and so forth. Let us consider only the important military prophecies which we now know were wrong. The first Allied strategy in the Chamberlain-Daladier phase of the war was based on the prophecy that Germany would be beaten by a defensive blockade. Until May the French General Staff, which was in command of all land operations in Europe, believed that the Maginot Line could not be broken, and that an attempt to turn it through Belgium would be defeated by a counter-offensive they had worked out on paper. They were, of course, mistaken. But the successors of Gen. Gamelin were no less mistaken: Marshals Petain and Weygand were entirely convinced in June that the collapse of France would be followed at once by the capitulation of Great Britain. Thus the first French commanders believed, falsely, in the impregnable Allied defensive on land and the later commanders believed, no less falsely, in the omnipotence of the German offensive. These fundamental miscalculations of the professional soldiers are perhaps as costly as any in the history of any great nation.

Last July, when Britain stood alone, it was the considered opinion of most of the professional airmen in Washington, and in fact all over the world except in the British Isles, that Goering's air force would obtain command of the air over Britain in about ten days after the attack started. There were dissenters, notably one of our own air attaches who had seen the Royal Air Force, and Col. Donovan who came back in July and almost single-handed overcame the unmitigated defeatism which was paralyzing Washington. We now know that the professionals at a distance were relying on a crude statistical calculation about the relative size of the two air forces and the productive capacity of the two nations: they had not known how to calculate the so-called imponderables—that is to say the relative quality of British and German planes, pilots, and tactical ingenuity. Nor could they calculate how British civilians would stand up to the bombing or what losses the German pilots could endure without flinching in the attack.

LATER IN THE summer, it was widely prophesied by professional soldiers here and abroad that the British would be driven out of the Mediterranean and their communications cut at Gibraltar and Suez. Conceivably, this might happen.

But the calculations of the summer were wrong because no one had been able to forsee the performance of the Italian navy, army, and air force. If anybody had said last summer that the British would now be holding and using Malta and actually passing convoys through the Mediterranean, he would have been set down as a cheerful idiot.

When Italy attacked Greece, it was the general opinion that the chances of Greece were no better than had been those of Finland. And almost nobody, who sought to calculate coldly, believed during the summer, or indeed the autumn, that Britain would not merely survive but would soon, thereafter, take the offensive successfully in the secondary, but still quite important, African theater of war.

WHAT IS IT in the last analysis which is common to all these miscalculations—of the French soldiers before and after their defeat, of Mussolini who entered the war thinking it was won when Hitler was military master of the continent, who thought he could knock out Greece, who thought he could attack Egypt and Suez? Of the airmen who pronounced the doom of Britain? Of the professionals all over the world who have been wholly astonished by the British offensive in Africa? The least common denominator of all these errors is, I venture to suggest, a failure to form a correct judgment of the value and the function of sea power.

The Chamberlain policy of reliance upon blockade was erroneous because blockade is only one, and by no means the most important, function of sea power. Its great function is to give the nation which commands the sea the means to draw upon the resources of the world and then, by the superiority in mobility of navies over armies to threaten the land power at more points than an army can hope to defend. If we, for example, lost command of the seas, how could we possibly know where on the vast coastlines of the American continents we ought to prepare to defend ourselves? The capacity to grow strong and the power to strike offensively at will are the classic functions of sea power and those who have grasped it, like Winston Churchill and Franklin Roosevelt, have understood this war, and those who have not grasped it, have not understood this war.

THE FRENCH GENERALS did not realize the meaning of sea power: That is why they prepared a war on land which was based on local French experience in the other war, and that is why, when these local plans went wrong, they thought the war must be over. Mussolini did not grasp the meaning of sea power, or he would have realized that Greece, unlike Poland and Czechoslovakia, is a maritime country, really a collection of islands within reach of British sea power and, for Italy, attainable only across a rather dangerous sea. Obviously also, he did not grasp what sea power would do to his African empire, what military lunacy it was to engage armies across a sea he did not control. Nor did anyone but the British leaders themselves realize that sea power could establish an offensive in Africa, and provide armies and assemble the means for the control of the air. Nor did our own pessimistic airmen, whose professional views are reflected in Col. Lindbergh, ever see in true perspective the relations between air power and sea power.

THERE ARE TWO public men who believe that the war can be won, and that it will be won without hurling masses of men at machine guns as in the massacres of the other war. Those two men, Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt, were respectively in the other war the effective heads of the British and American navies. Both are saturated in the traditions of the sea and in the history of the strategy of sea power. When Mr. Churchill says that he does not want and does not need mass armies to hurl at Hitler, he is entitled to be believed now because he never believed in it in the other war. Mr. Churchill does not and never has belonged to the school of military thinkers who produced the hideous four-year slaughter on the Western Front.

He is the man of Antwerp and the Dardanelles, and I suppose Salonika—that is to say the man who follows the classic principles of sea power in a war with land power. He was baffled in the other war. In this war he obtained authority only at the last desperate moment. But already we see the results—entirely unbelievable and incomprehensible to those who are still spellbound by the other badly conducted war—of sea power used fully and truly as in the Napoleonic wars, to seize the initiative, to bewilder the land power, to threaten him here, and there, and anywhere from Norway to Turkey, to shake his alliances, and to raise against him resistance and eventual rebellion among all his victims.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Mrs. Roosevelt

AFTER YEARS of masquerading as a rather naive but always well-meaning amateur fuss-budget, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt lately has been revealing herself as a cunning and indefatigable conspirator against the rights and independence of the individual American citizen and an active proponent of power-government. Mrs. Roosevelt has become bolder or incautious in the last few months, particularly since the second reelection of her husband, and on Thursday she attended a rally of a semicommunistic electricians' union of the A. F. of L. in New York, joined in whooping "God Bless America," and reiterated the Muscovites' formula of entrapment which holds that every one should join a labor organization. The union whose members Mrs. Roosevelt addressed, has a strike on in which rioters recently outnumbered and mobbed New York police, and is pursuing a policy similar to that of Sidney Hillman's organization, which is to eliminate the small operator by economic ruin, consolidate the business in a few big survivors and then take over the industry under union management.

MRS. ROOSEVELT'S partiality to collectivism has been apparent for a long time, but always in the guise of a warm, humane desire to promote brotherhood and willing cooperation, a pretense which she still maintains in words. But it is becoming apparent that her purpose is to discredit as selfish and undeserving reactionaries all who reject her advice, and thus subject them to the many ingenious forms of persecution which labor unions employ to capture unwilling members.

Her attendance at the rally of the strikers was a valuable act of ballyhoo for the union in a labor dispute, and obviously was intended to create a political effect, although Mrs. Roosevelt, of course, still will pretend to be acting only as an individual citizen who does not partake of her husband's office. She offered this pretense in her enthusiastic encouragement of the communistic Youth Congress, which continued until the congress became so notorious that it would have been an unbearable political embarrassment to her to continue the association. She remains a deadhead member of the Newspaper Guild, also dominated by Communists in the key offices, although she is absolutely ineligible for membership under its constitution, and is exempt from the two most painful requirements of membership, the duties to strike and picket.

THE GUILD, incidentally like Hillman in a key office of the Government, is a vigorous partisan in labor questions, being a union of the C. I. O. Thus, in most matters of coverage, Sister Roosevelt can expect a favorable break from her brothers and sisters in the guild. The guild, of course, will deny that membership in and loyalty to itself could effect the objectivity of its members in their reporting of news, but it repudiated its own contention on this point when it required Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes to resign from the American Press Society on the ground that his strictly honorary membership in that body might some time affect his judgment on a hypothetical issue between the guild and the society before the Supreme Court.

Mrs. Roosevelt is extremely shrewd in her manipulation of her publicity, as was observed by the observing when, after election, she made print in a large way with a story of her great generosity in giving away all the earnings which she had acquired by exploiting her husband's office as a journalist and lecturer. The fact still remained that the question was not what she did with the money but why it was paid to her, and moreover, she refused to say whom she had given it to. A detailed statement as to that would be much more interesting than the news that she gave it away, and certainly would cause a much less pleasant public reaction. She refused flatly to give the information.

LATELY Mrs. Roosevelt was quoted as having said that the President could take over Henry Ford, and soon afterward the President himself, in a press conference heavily salted with C. I. O.-guild reporters, reiterated this contention in slightly modified form, not failing, incidentally, to cast a smear on Ford, who is engaged in strife with the C. I. O. and the Labor Relations Board.

The effect of Mrs. Roosevelt's shrewd and deceptive campaign will be minimized if it be kept in mind that she is always a politician; that James A. Farley long ago described her as one of the ablest politicians of his acquaintance, and that her objective is collectivism and, ultimately, some scheme containing the most binding elements of communism and Hitlerism. Her innocent, wholehearted, humane enthusiasm, the whooping awkwardness and the baby kissing in its many variations, are only a disguise.

Capital Parade

By Joseph Alsop And Robert Kintner

Hutchful Of Kilkenny Cats

SOONER OR LATER every Government agency without a firm, acknowledged boss comes to resemble a hutchful of Kilkenny cats. And although the OPM is charged with the task of preparing the American defense in a critical hour, it is unfortunately well on the way to demonstrating this sad rule of human nature.

At this moment, a factional controversy over the functions of the OPM has just been settled, after appeals to the President. The management of priorities has become so hot an issue that Commissioner Leon Henderson has resigned from the priorities board and bounced off to the South for a vacation. And the New Deal and labor groups seem to be preparing a guerrilla sortie against the OPM secretary, Frederick Eaton, which may well end in a general spat over the position of dollar-a-year men in the Government.

ALSOP

Of course some friction was inevitable in such an organization as the OPM, and although the bickering seems a little excessive, it does not distract the attention of the more sensible officials from the job in hand. The job is getting done, slowly but surely. The point is that if there were less bickering, the job would get done more rapidly.

THE FACTIONAL controversy above mentioned was particularly significant, both because its topic, the OPM's job, is so important, and because the division was not along the usual New Deal-businessmen lines. The central figure in it was Donald Nelson, the big, serious, able Sears, Roebuck executive who came to Washington last summer to serve as the Defense Commission's director of purchasing. In that post, he made an unusual record, working closely with the quartermaster general, and saving the Government a good deal of money on routine supplies. He is now director of purchasing for the OPM and the scope of his duties has been extended from such simple equipment as uniforms and soldiers' kits to cover the whole range of military materiel.

This brought him into collision at once with the technicians in the Army and Navy procurement branches. Some of these men, such as the Army ordnance officers, do a good job. Others do not. There is ample room for application of Nelson's four tests to Army and Navy procurement—that the services should get what they want when they want it, at the lowest price, and with the least disturbance to the economy. Furthermore, Nelson reasonably assumed that if the OPM was to be of any value at all, it must be permitted to coordinate the entire buying and production program. He did not wish to interfere with the technicians, but he did ask full advance information on all orders to be placed, and the right to suggest alternatives if it seemed to him the orders were being placed unwisely.

TO THE LAYMAN, Nelson's request would seem to have embodied the minimum authority required by the OPM for moderate effectiveness. Nevertheless, the Army and Navy procurement men, who do not willingly share responsibility, immediately got their backs up. There is a group of businessmen around William S. Knudsen who regard themselves as sojourners in a hostile land, treat the Government as an enemy, and therefore wish to prevent the OPM from sticking its neck out. They sided with the Army and Navy procurement men. On the other hand, curiously enough, Nelson was supported by the New Deal and labor groups, who like him. The question was finally taken to the President, though not by Nelson. And the final decision is now confidentially expected to be in Nelson's favor.

Although there were businessmen on both sides of the purchasing controversy, it was significant that the New Deal and labor crowd turned up in the corner opposite from the crowd in Knudsen's office. Approximately the same factional line-up is discernible in Leon Henderson's argument with the priorities committee. Henderson, defense commissioner in charge of prices and a close friend of Nelson's, started by getting on well with the businessmen, but is now back in the New Deal camp. He is reported to take the position that the priorities committee is not "tough enough," and it was because he did not wish to be a party to his colleagues' allegedly easy methods that he has temporarily shaken the dust of Washington from his feet.

FINALLY, the same line-up again appears in the subterranean row over Frederick Eaton, and the dollar-a-year men of whom Eaton is made the symbol. Eaton is one of the men who have got on least well with the New Dealers and labor people. He is also Knudsen's personal counsel, and an extremely able lawyer. When the OPM was set up, Knudsen wished to give him a secretaryship, a purely administrative post with considerable powers.

KINTNER

Knudsen obtained the apparent consent of his labor codirector of the OPM, Sidney Hillman, while Hillman was ill at Johns Hopkins. Hillman's subordinates refused, however, to accept the verdict, and with their New Deal allies, to aid them, are now busily trying to get Eaton's job. The argument is even being made that when Hillman talked to Knudsen, he was in a high fever, and not altogether responsible for his words. As it happens, although a dollar-a-year man, Eaton relinquished his interests in his New York law firm when he entered the Government. But this is not generally known, and he is one of the men most often mentioned by the New Dealers who demand that the Defense Commission officials sever the former ties and take Government salaries, or return to their former ties.

TO REPEAT, this sort of bickering is not of lasting importance unless it is permitted to grow worse. Each side is partly right and partly wrong in most of the rows, and no particular individual should be blamed. The real fault lies in the OPM organization which, while a vast improvement on the Defense Commission, permits no man to give a yes or no answer that will stick on any question that arises.

The Once Over

It Helps Some

("The Aga Khan has been compelled to cut his racing stable down to one horse."—News item.)

If you've been hard hit by the war—
If you have felt its frightful touch—
If you are getting more and more
To feel your lot is not so much;
If you're enveloped in the blues—
If daily by some blow you're hit,
Here is some rather soothing news—
The Aga Khan is feeling it!

If you are prone to knit your brows
And worry over what's ahead—
If you've a tendency to grouse
About the way that you've been bled;
If you're complaining of the mess—
If every broadcast makes you blue,
This thought will help a bit, I guess—
The Aga Khan is scrimping, too!

If Europe's war has burdened you
And made you go a little slow
In making any outlays new
Or being careless with your dough;
If you have felt war's bitter sting
And think that you've been put upon,
This item may be comforting—
All's not so well with Aga Khan.

If your life isn't what it was—
If you must count your shekels now—
If day by day the conflict does
Its best to sink you by the bow!
If you are cutting down on gas
To make each dime the limit go,
This ought to help you let it pass—
The Aga Khan is low on dough.

If you can't live the way you did
And must add water to the soup;
If it's been months since you were rid
Of all the cares that 'round you swoop;
If you must now economize—
If you've cut out the fresh meat course,
This fact may help your spirits rise—
The Aga Khan's on his last horse!

Japan seems anxious to get into the war, but there is just a chance that both she and America may be kept on the waiting list until somebody resigns.

Ireland's Fate

By Mark Sullivan

The Importance Of Her Position

PRIME MINISTER CHURCHILL, in his speech last Sunday, mentioned almost every country in Europe—except Ireland. He described as probable an early descent by Germany upon Bulgaria, and thence upon the other Balkan countries. In warning to those countries, he alluded to the fate of Denmark, Holland and Belgium. But Mr. Churchill did not mention Ireland as a probable scene of German operations.

SULLIVAN

For this omission by Mr. Churchill there is a surmisable reason. Just because Ireland is a possible scene of early action by Germany, it is for that reason a subject of intense concern on the part of Britain. And so delicate and difficult are the relations between Britain and Ireland that even to mention Ireland as a possible subject of German invasion might work to the detriment of Britain in the psychology of the Irish people. Whether this or some other be the reason for Mr. Churchill's omission, the fact is that Ireland figures large in any speculation of the probable course of the war in the near future.

IN ANY SUCH speculation, one can start with at least two sound assumptions. The first is that Hitler must win the war (or get a negotiated peace that will be the equivalent of winning). Hitler must win, and the whole Nazi hierarchy, big and little, must win. There must be as many as a million men in Germany who have a vested interest in winning, a life and death interest. If they lose, they probably die. Kaiser Wilhelm was able to lose the Great War—but could run away to Holland and live comfortably for 23 years until the present day. But there is no Holland for Hitler to run to nor the tens of thousands of minor Hitlers, down to the brown-shirt corporals. On the whole face of the globe, hardly is there any country to which Hitler and the Nazi hierarchy could flee and be safe in the sense that Kaiser Wilhelm was safe in Holland. The Nazi hierarchy must win the war.

Winning the war means one thing. It was put in words by Mr. Churchill in his speech last Sunday:

"Hitler must destroy Great Britain. He may carry havoc into the Balkan states; he may tear great provinces out of Russia; he may march to the Caspian; he may march to the gates of India. All this will avail him nothing."

Hitler must destroy Great Britain. For that there are two ways. One is slow strangulation—by first narrowing the sea paths to that island until there is but a single lane remaining, and then intensified destruction of shipping on that lane. The defect of this method is that it is slow. In proportion as it is slow it runs risk of being offset by the United States. If actual strangulation of Britain were in sight, there can be little doubt that the United States would act to overcome it. With the spectacle of slow strangulation of Britain before America's eyes over a period of months, America would go far beyond the present "help Britain" bill.

HITLER'S OTHER method is invasion of England—simultaneous invasion by land, sea and air. That Prime Minister Churchill thinks this the more probable method, is suggested by the spirit of his speech last Sunday.

It is in connection with the invasion of Britain that Ireland is commonly mentioned. So far as Ireland figures, the almost universal assumption is that the Germans would first descend upon Ireland, establish themselves firmly there, and from there (as well as from France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark and Norway) descend upon Britain. In common discussion, descent upon Ireland is looked upon as a preliminary step, taking place weeks in advance of attempted invasion of England.

But there is a view, novel yet tenable, which says Hitler's strategy would be different. It would be to descend upon Britain and Ireland simultaneously. In such a tactic, Hitler would have the advantage of two objectives—one ultimate, one intermediate. This is a form of strategy Hitler frequently practices. If he made his invasion of Britain stick, he would win the war at once. If he failed in England, but got a foothold in Ireland, he would win much. He would have a foothold for future descent upon England; in addition, he would have extended his ring around England for the purpose of blockade until it was close to encirclement.

SIMULTANEOUS DESCENT by Hitler upon both England and Ireland would be more difficult for the British to resist, than descent upon England alone. The British would feel it necessary to prevent Hitler from landing upon Ireland, for Ireland is Britain's Achilles heel. It is an Achilles heel upon which Britain is forbidden to put armor in advance. Simultaneous descent upon the two islands would make the maximum of confusion for the British—both psychological and military—and confusion is one of Hitler's weapons.

What is said here is speculative. But in it is one solid fact, ominous to Ireland. Ireland today is in the position occupied by Norway, Denmark, Holland and Belgium before Germany fell upon them. She is in danger, as the others were in danger. Like the others, her only possible help is Britain. Again like the others, she is unwilling to invite Britain in to give her that help—until it is too late.

The coordinator of the office, Paul V. McNutt, took steps yesterday to form a national advisory committee on this phase of the program. He asked that the committee aid local officials in setting up adequate facilities for selectees on leave.

Egyptian Legation Celebrates King Farouk's Birthday at Party

By Hope Ridings Miller

SEVERAL HOURS AHEAD of time, the twenty-first birthday of His Majesty, King Farouk I of Egypt, was celebrated at the Egyptian Legation yesterday afternoon from 5 to 7 o'clock. The natal date really falls today, and at noon members of the legation staff will gather around a luncheon table to drink a toast to their ruler, whose titles include that of King of Misr, Lord of Nubia and the Sudan and sovereign of Kordofan and Darfour.

Hope Ridings Miller

Yesterday's celebration, however, gathered in a number of notables from diplomatic, official and residential circles; and while the fete never assumed the proportions of the lavish diplomatic receptions in the past, it ran away with honors as one of the supergala afternoon parties of the season. Instead of crested, engraved invitations from the Egyptian Minister and Mme. Hassan, calling cards from the latter with a simple notation for an "at home" went out as bids to the party. Because of the war, the gathering was informal, and smaller than the usual diplomatic reception.

The Minister and Mme. Hassen received in the second-floor drawing room, where a portrait of Egypt's youthful king looks down from the wall. Mme. Hassan was smartly turned out in a floor-length frock of black crepe, fashioned with a jacket-effect blouse studded in gold. A cerise and purple sash and a corsage of orchids further accented her becoming ensemble.

RED ROSES sprouted from low bowls everywhere. A dainty cluster of freesias—the first I've seen in a long time—were featured on a low table in the reception hall, and a huge bouquet of roses interspersed with Easter lilies centered the tea table. Champagne toasts were drunk to the health of His Majesty, King Farouk, as guests gathered around the small table at one end of the room.

All members of the legation staff mingled in the crowd, seeing that everybody enjoyed himself. The First Secretary, Ali Foad Toulba, took a stand near the dining room door, greeting guests as they entered. Mme. Toulba was doing her assisting duties on the other side of the room. Andre Cattaui was here, there and everywhere, making introductions, answering questions, and explaining over and over again that King Farouk's natal day actually is celebrated on February 11 and that yesterday's party was a sort of pre-birthday fete.

Several members of the Diplomatic Corps arrived early and stayed late to enjoy the pleasant party. The Peruvian Ambassador, Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander, was one of the first to be received. Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, was greeting friends on all sides. The Minister of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close came in to pay their respects, as did the Minister of Yugoslavia and Mme. Fotitch; Mme. Bostrom, wife of the Minister of Sweden, and the Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos.

MRS. JOSEPH DAVIES was seen in the throng. Nearby stood Mrs. Millard Tydings, wearing a tiny white feathered turban well back on her becoming coiffure. Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Prochnik made their way through the crowd. Mrs. Breckinridge Long stood near the champagne table, chatting first with one friend and then another.

Just back from spending a few days at their country place at Charmian, Pa., were Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Culbertson. Mrs. Horace Smith was there and looking quite the fashion picture in some sort of a tailored frock which I didn't notice in detail because her natty blue turban caught my eye too quickly. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Britten were among the guests, as were Mrs. Thad Brown, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose and the Minister of Portugal and Mme. Bianchi.

"Have you met the new Chilean Ambassador?" someone asked. He was being introduced around by Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris and members of his own embassy staff. Mrs. Sol Bloom was there, accompanied by Miss Vera Bloom. Mrs. Ralph Brewster was among those present, as was pretty Mrs. Claude Pepper, whose small sailor hat, topped with perky feathers was one of the prettiest there.

Mrs. Hamilton Fish and her daughter, Miss Susan Rogers, arrived during the latter half of the party, as did Mrs. Nevile Butler, of the British Embassy; Mrs. Emil Hurjja, Mrs. Thomas Burke and Mrs. Herbert Feis.

Still others there were Mr. and Mrs. George Boncesco, the latter "talking art" with Portrait-painter Jan de Rosen; Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Watson, the Minister of Thailand and Mme. Seni Pramoj, Baroness Baeyens, of the French Embassy, and many more.

EARLIER IN THE afternoon I dropped by Decatur House where Mrs. Truxtun Beale and members of her committee were working on plans for the "Piccadilly Arcade," the benefit sale for the Royal Air Force Benevolent Fund. The event doesn't go on the boards until early in April (April 3, 4 and 5—to be exact) but a well-organized group is completing arrangements for the sale, which is to take place at 1423-25 F Street.

THE USUAL placid small talk of Capital afternoon parties is no more. Instead, peppery discussions of the lease-lend bill even manage to drown out the genteel rattle of tea cups. Senators and Representatives cannot show their faces anymore without being buttonholed by belligerent guests who want to know how they voted or will vote.

DUDLEY HARMON

At the tea given the other afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lincoln O'Brien, one youthful Representative who was for the bill was deploring the present acrimonious spirit of Washington. A young lady present said, "But you've got to be a fanatic to get anywhere." "That's probably true," he laughed, "but look what queer places the fanatics of the world seem to get."

Pity the poor Congressman these days! Their mail on the bill is so heavy that what with answering it, seeing constituents and attending sessions, most of them are working until late at night.

HOWEVER, many from Congress took time off to attend the tea given by Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien. Senator Burton K. Wheeler came in, accompanied by his wife, and Senator and Mrs. Joseph O'Mahoney were also among the guests. Mr. O'Brien was formerly publisher of a Boston paper and there were many from Massachusetts present. Representative Joe Martin sat down at a small table to enjoy the buffet supper of shrimp, cold meat and green salad, which was served from a long table at the Sulgrave Club.

Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers wore a mink coat over her black dress. After 28 years in the same apartment, she is having to look around for new lodgings, the building having been sold recently to a business association. Like any public figure, Mrs. Rogers occasionally gets threatening letters, so her maids want her to take an apartment, instead of a house. "They aren't worried if I'm at home," laughed Mrs. Rogers, "as they figure cranks would overlook them."

REPRESENTATIVE Thomas Eliot, of Massachusetts, dropped in, accompanied by Mrs. Eliot. Others included Mrs. Stanley Reed, Justice and Mrs. Justin Miller, Dean and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Mr. and Mrs. Alex Hawes.

A STRICTLY younger set party was the tea given by Bambie McKenna and her younger sister, Joan, the other afternoon. Some 50 friends gathered in their home on Kalorama Circle in the late afternoon.

Dr. and Mrs. J. Lawn Thompson, jr., who were married just a few weeks ago, were among the guests. The pretty bride wore a mink coat over her red wool dress and a matching red hat. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Knowlton said that Mrs. Knowlton's brother, Manuel Trucco, son of the former Chilean Ambassador here, landed in New York yesterday with his bride. They are expected here soon for a visit. Mr. Trucco will work for a nitrate company in New York.

Others included Edward Foote, of New York, nephew of Mrs. McKenna; Evelyn Walker, Juliette Dulany, Capt. and Mrs. Thomas Crystal, Mrs. William T. Mann and Maj. Burdette Fitch.

HAVING just sold her first book, a mystery novel, Mrs. Warren Pierson is already at work on another. She says her husband, who is director of the Export-Import Bank, is alarmed that she can think of so many different ways to murder people.

Alarm Clocks Now Easier On Sleepers

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Today's alarm clocks are becoming friendly. Their ring is gentle though insistent, and the electric alarms have the added virtue of never forgetting. You can set them once, and they'll never run down or fail to go off at the designated hour.

Many of these new electric clocks are very smart indeed, decorative assets in any room. One beauty is of alabaster with burnished copper hands and numerals. Others of glass, wood, plastic and porcelain are stunning and are made for the wall or for the table use with easel backs.

We're a clock fan, anyway, holding that there should be a good clock in every room in the house if possible. Preferably one grandfather clock and maybe a little "lady" clock, and certainly there should be at least one perfectly regulated electric clock in every house, to keep the other family clocks and watches on the dot. If the initial investment in a good electric clock holds you back, just remember that a few missed appointments in business or a tardy record at the office might cost far more than the price of a reliable clock.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Divorcee, Past 40, Is Treated by Her Parents 'As if She Were Young Girl;' They Tearfully Resist Her Desire to Live Apart From Them

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: The desire to have a little apartment of my own has become an obsession with me. My parents have a fit whenever I find the courage to try to discuss it. I am past 40, and was married for 17 years when my husband and I agreed we could no longer live together. For ten years we had our own home, but now for the past five years I have been back with my parents. After my divorce, I took a business course and found a good position, for which I am very grateful, but I am not satisfied.

I feel that even though it might be necessary to budget carefully to have a nice one-room apartment of my own, it would be worth it,—to feel that I was "on my own" instead of being treated as a young girl by my parents. We live in a bungalow, which means that we have just about as much privacy as you would find in a gold fish bowl. If I have callers, it worries me when they stay late,—as the sound of conversation carries all through the house, even when doors are closed. The same is true of the radio. If we talk softly, so as not to disturb my parents in the next room, they comment later on "how quiet we were, etc.

Many a time I have gone out with a friend (whom I had thought I would marry later) in his car, in all kinds of weather, and sat there reading or chatting,—just because we wanted to be together without the family always around. But now that friendship is broken off,—for several reasons. When my husband and I,—after living with them for a time after marriage,—started buying our own place they threw up their hands in horror at the idea of me leaving home. They said we couldn't afford it. But I wanted my own home so much that we went ahead, and managed far better than they thought we could.

Then they came and lived with us over a year "to help out," and also because they thought I should not be "alone." It didn't work congenially, so they moved,—but into the neighborhood. Then, later, they bought a house next door, which was a mistake, so far as my husband and I were concerned. Maybe some other families could have managed with less bickering, interference and jealousy, but we didn't. However, I don't blame my parents entirely for the trouble which caused my divorce. There were other, more serious difficulties. But their ever-present solicitude for their "only child" (myself) undoubtedly was a contributing factor.

My mother was accustomed to a large family and craves much companionship, social life, going places, etc. My father is content to stay home. I am the "happy medium." I like entertaining and being entertained, but I can also be content when alone—especially after being at work all day. Mother would find it nightmarish to have to eat alone, whereas I don't mind it in the least.

Do you think I am unreasonable, selfish and ungrateful in being dissatisfied with the present arrangement? (I pay them $40 a month, voluntarily, insisting that they take it, and buy different things for the house from time to time.) They get angry, shed tears and lecture me when I speak of getting a place of my own. Their invariable argument is, "What will people think?" (They probably think people would say we couldn't get along, and "how queer that an only daughter doesn't want to live at home with her papa and mama.") Maybe if I could live "on my own" for a while I would better appreciate what they have done, and are trying to do, for me.

But I am completely fed up with parental attention. (Just now mother wanted to know what I was writing!) No matter what I do or where I go, I am always asked for an explanation. It gets me down that I can't do anything without explaining,—and they do not understand why I feel that way. I know one owes some consideration to one's parents,—but must it be to the extent of always accepting their ideas? Are they expecting too much? Or am I just hard-hearted? Your advice will be greatly appreciated. Sincerely, SERENA V.

Cut 'The Silver Cord;' Lead Your Own Life

DEAR SERENA V.: You should have been standing on your own feet, completely emancipated from parental supervision, these past 20 years. And had you put off their sentimental tyranny the day you got married it is entirely possible you would be still living with your husband today. For, while you say that your parents weren't altogether responsible for the divorce (as "there were other, more serious difficulties"), it is very likely that their brash intrusion into your marital affairs drove your husband out of his home and into a labyrinth of disloyal consolatory entanglements—either with other women or with drinking, gambling male companions; and in any event established him in a pattern of embittered irresponsibility toward the marriage.

My advice to you is to possess yourself, without further delay or timid apology, of that freedom of action, that place of your own, which you so desperately want, so sorely need and are so clearly entitled to. As a once-married woman, past 40 years of age, you need no chaperonage save your own common sense. And the attitude to take toward your parents' petulant query, "What will people think?" is that your mode of living is strictly your business, so long as you abide by the rules of convention and the laws of society.

Incidentally, neither set of regulations would require a woman past 40 to live with her parents, just to please them, when she would rather not. Indeed, the modern-day emphasis is entirely in the opposite direction. A person of mature age, demonstrably capable of being self-supporting, is more subject to healthy skepticism today for clinging to his parents' apron strings or taking perennial shelter under their wing (as the case may be) than ever he is for cutting the "silver cord" and proceeding to live his life altogether independently of theirs.

Whether their motives are witlessly well-meaning or mercilessly selfish, your parents are guilty in either case of finessing you out of a normal existence, of shutting you off from life almost as effectively as if they had committed you to an institution for the care of mental incompetents. And, in my opinion, your obsessive desire to cut clear of their suffocating surveillance and lead a life of your own is a mark of psychological health,—and not a reaction of filial ingratitude.

If you were to remain in the present set-up for another five to ten years either your driving will-to-be-free would have wasted away or your parents then would begin to represent that they were "too old to be left alone"—and your overly conscientious sense of duty would render you helpless in the face of that argument. So the time to get going on your own power is now—without waste of another day's precious time. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Over the Coffee Cup with Ted Wilkins

The lowest official temperature ever recorded in Washington was fifteen below zero on February 11th, 1899. The coldest day on record was the day before, when tops for 24 hours was four degrees above zero.

That's the year I started in the coffee business—can you blame me? The weather has improved since then, and so has Wilkins Coffee. Every year we've managed to make a better product. We think it's the finest coffee money can buy, and we're not through improving by a long shot.

Peplums Herald Spring

Peplums will be seen flipping out jauntily on coats and jackets, as well as on dresses, this season. There are puffed and bloused peplums about the hips and tiers of peplums about the skirts. "Look to peplums as a sign of spring," says the current issue of Vogue. The dress above shows a new wrinkle in the use of peplums. The finely crinkled zebra print of duPont rayon features a detachable peplum. With the peplum tied at the back, the frock really becomes a two-in-one. This print tells of the return of last winter's old standby, brown on black. There are other combinations, too, such as pink on pink and blue on blue. The mademoiselle wears a Howard Hodge hat

Dress Designing Home Taught

DRESS DESIGNING—a fascinating career for the girl who has good style sense, a passion for clothes. And with the American fashion field expanding as it is these days, there's bound to be a warm welcome for any talents you may show.

Of course, before you can become a professional designer you need some training. But the essentials of such training, at least, can be studied at home.

With the help of charts and diagrams you quickly learn the principles of design, how to fit and flatter the curves of the figure.

While you are still a beginner, best for you first to make a simple sketch of your design. Then, working from this sketch, you drape a muslin pattern on a dress form, taking in darts to shape your fabric to the seven basic curves of the body shown in our diagram. They are (1) bust, (2) abdomen, (3) shoulder point, (4) elbow, (5) side hip, (6) hip curve, and (7) shoulder blade.

Actually you only make half a pattern, called professionally a "sloper." For the front of the blouse, for instance, place your muslin against one side of the dummy, pinning in place.

Then fit, allowing for curves of shoulder, bust and abdomen by pinning darts at shoulder, under the arm and at waist. Next, plan the trimming with chalk marks or thread.

Mixing Opposites, Bad at Parties Says Elissa Landi

"If you want that dinner party to be a success, don't mix people of dissimilar interests," is a bit of advice to the aspiring hostess from Elissa Landi, actress, who recently gave a program of dramatic impersonations to the Town Hall audience at the Shoreham Hotel.

"People don't like opposites," she says. "They like those with tastes, interests and inclinations that are similar to their own."

Miss Landi's own favorite form of entertaining is a buffet supper where everything can be kept fairly informal and the guests can circulate freely and form their own conversational groups.

When she gives a buffet party she arranges a large table with silver and china and an attractive centerpiece and then provides plenty of small tables. She doesn't like to see men trying to balance a plate of food on their knees and she doesn't clutter up these small tables with flowers or other decorations.

She serves lots of canapes, at least one meat course and a sweet, and then, of course, coffee. Pickles and relishes of her own making are also generally included.

Linen Sources

Our modern supply of manufactured linen goods comes largely from Ireland where it has been manufactured as far back as the thirteenth century. The linen industry in Ireland did not receive its major impetus, however, until the time of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685 when thousands of Huguenot weavers settled in Ireland and brought with them their textile traditions and skill.

Prolong Life of Linens

Sheets, tablecloths, napkins, and similar household linens which are washed and ironed regularly each week can be given longer life if they are folded and pressed differently from time to time. Fabrics tend to wear thin if they are always folded in the same way.

Arlington Clubs Hear Society Editor of Post

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor

Seven clubs joined yesterday in the sixth annual institute of the Federated Women's Clubs of Arlington, held at the Washington Golf and Country Club, with the Cherrydale Club as hostess. Hope Ridings Miller, society editor of The Post, was guest speaker at the afternoon session on "Responsibilities of Citizens in National Defense."

Women can play a part in defense, said Mrs. Miller, by keeping themselves informed, maintaining a realistic point of view, and not allowing themselves to be swayed by their emotions.

She advised the women not to leave decisions to men but to read, listen and keep their hands on the pulse of events so as to make intelligent use of the influence they could weild in their own spheres.

In addition to her discussion of defense, Mrs. Miller gave off-the-record glimpses of the Capital as a society editor sees it, and read several poems.

Following her talk, there was a forum on "Responsibilities of Citizens in National Defense" with representatives of the various clubs participating. They were Mrs. L. M. Gilbert, from Arlington; Mrs. O. R. LeBeau, Ashton Heights; Mrs. Jerome Holloway, Cherrydale; Mrs. W. D. Marshall, Clarenford; Mrs. Joel Brown, Lyon Park; Mrs. F. N. Pfeiffer, Lyon Village, and Mrs. Ben C. White, Waycroft. Mrs. J. B. Lowell presided.

The business session in the morning, of which Mrs. Crosby Hoar, president of the Cherrydale Club, was in charge, included variout committee reports. Mrs. Ira N. Gabrielson, of the Lyon Village Club, reported on the work of the County American Citizenship Group, formed two years ago. Its first year was devoted to studying county problems and encouraging the various clubs to see that their members registered and voted. This season the Arlington Club is studying the county police system, Mrs. Gabrielson said; the Lyon Village Club, juvenile delinquency and recreation; the Clarenford Club, county planning and zoning, and the Waycroft Club plans to show a film on social security.

Mrs. Elias Fox reported on the consumers' milk committee, Mrs. W. D. Watt on the State board meeting at Richmond and Mrs. Arthur Orr on plans for the Virginia State federation convention, to be held at the Wardman Park Hotel here May 6, 7, and 8. A question box was conducted by Mrs. Merwyn McKnight and an original monologue given by Mrs. Charles Russell.

The invocation at the morning session was by Mrs. Watt and the response to Mrs. Hoar's welcome by Mrs. W. D. Marshall. Music included the singing of the State federation song and the golden jubilee march, led by Mrs. Kathryne Lawrence and accompanied by Mrs. R. N. Davidson.

Mrs. J. D. Pope was secretary for the institute. The committee in charge included Mrs. J. H. Rixse, Mrs. E. M. Shreve, Mrs. J. S. Warner and Mrs. C. E. Wismer.

A.A.U.W. Hears Post Columnist

Underwood & Underwood

Mary Haworth (left) widely read columnist of the Woman's Page of The Post, was guest of honor and speaker yesterday afternoon at the weekly tea of the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women

An S. R. O. sign was needed yesterday when an overflow audience attended the tea at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women with Mary Haworth, of The Post, as guest speaker. "If you come again, we'll have to build a larger clubhouse," one of the members remarked to her.

Miss Haworth told of some of the problems presented to her for solution in her column, "Mary Haworth's Mail," and answered questions from the floor. Admitting they were, for the most part, "past the age where we are troubled by love problems" the members of the A. A. U. W. devoted most of their questions to the economic and sociological aspects of daily living discussed in "Mary Haworth's Mail."

Answering a question as to why she had "apparently boundless faith in the value of psychoanalysis and psychiatry," Miss Haworth declared it was not a boundless faith "but, rather, a belief any device or technique which gives the troubled individual increased self understanding is a step in the direction of better self-management."

Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, president of the branch, opened the program and Dean Mary Louise Brown presented Miss Haworth.

Exercise Will Improve Legs For Shorter Skirt Lengths

By Ida Jean Kain

DON'T LET anyone try to tell you that your skirts should be elevated to 17 or 18 inches from the floor regardless. According to the best designers, there is no official skirt length and never can be, for the height of chic depends on the length and the shape of the leg.

The rule of having the skirt cover "half of the calf" works out very flatteringly for most individuals, for it does take length into account. That height, however, still calls for a trim calf and ankle and most women would not get any prizes for these measurements.

The reason seems to be they don't get enough exercise. A poll of beauties noted for their lovely limbs shows that such assets are not always happenstance. One Broadway star makes a practice of walking barefoot on her toes for ten minutes a day. Another kicks off her shoes the minute she comes home and goes around the house barefoot. Then there's a Hollywood actress who walks barefoot in the sand at the beach for 30 minutes a day—and that really is exercise.

Watch Your Exercise

But what does the average woman do? Nothing.

Standing on your two legs a good share of the time may be enough for all practical purposes, but not for beauty. If your legs are to be shapely, your leg muscles must have a good shape, and that depends on their tone. Lack of muscle tone is the main trouble, whether legs are fat and pudgy or skinny and underdeveloped.

Turn on the radio, slip out of your pumps, get on your toes and skip around the room. That's good legwork. Then rise on the toes of one foot as you press the heel of the other foot down in a rhythmic Indian war dance. Up on the toes, down on the heels. That will strengthen wobbly ankles, slim off the lumps of fat that make your ankles appear bulky, and beautify the calf contour. Conversely, if your legs are too skinny, it will help to build them up.

Walk on Toes

Skip rope on the toes, twice on the left foot, then twice on the right as the rope slips under. Do the old reliable deep-knee bend—keep the feet parallel and heels flat on the floor and bend the knees as far as possible.

When you walk up and down stairs, make a habit of walking on the toes rather than coming down on the entire foot. And to give the calf muscles a good stretch, stand on the edge of a step and push the heel down below the step level. Try that with alternate feet.

If you have a tendency to knock-knees, you could do no better than to ride a bicycle. The pedaling forces you to hold the legs correctly and counteracts the inclination to rotate the knees inward—that may be all that't wrong.

Music Sorority Hears Address By Mrs. Steves

Children will love music when their instruction can be classified as "music lessons, not piano lessons," and becomes "the teaching of principles, rather than pieces," Esther Requarth Steves told members of Sigma Alpha Iota professional music sorority last night.

Addressing a meeting of the Washington Chapter at the home of Mrs. Florence Elliott, 121 Hesketh Street, Chevy Chase, she also demonstrated the value of rhythmical work preceding actual practice at the keyboard.

Mrs. Steves, who has taught and lectured throughout this country and abroad, advised group work for all beginners in the study of music and for students "from 4 years to 60," as an aid to thorough musicianship.

Little children taught to move to the rhythm of the classics before they begin to learn to play develop a feeling for rhythm that makes it natural to them when they come to apply it in their own performance, she said. It becomes part of their understanding of music, rather than a laborious process of counting.

The study of bird calls; learning to listen to them and recognize the intervals, makes children tone-conscious, said Mrs. Steves, and teaches them to hear the music that is all around them.

When instruction in music gives students a grasp of the principles, they learn sincerity, patience, accuracy, obedience, order and poise, as well as the joy of accomplishment. These lessons, gained in the application of the principles of music, are useful to them in all other endeavors of life, she pointed out.

As children learn to regard music as an expression of ideas, they value ideas which come to them and find joy in recording them, said Mrs. Steves. She illustrated with compositions of young children who were given this kind of an approach to music.

Mrs. Steves, now a resident of Washington, is an honorary member of Sigma Alpha Iota.

Voteless League Members Go On Field Trip

Progress in carrying out recommendations of the Kepecs report for children's services in Washington was described to members of the social welfare department of the Voteless League of Women Voters on a field trip yesterday to visit the foster homes for dependent children. Mrs. Henry P. Chandler is the department chairman.

Miss Patricia Morss, director of Foster Home Care in the Children's division of the Department of Public Welfare, said the number of dependent children cared for daily has been reduced from nine to five by the addition of the ne wprotective services for children. These are cared for in two subsidized foster homes, she said, instead of with older children where they were formerly obliged to be.

New officers of the sorority will be installed at the dinner, including Dorothy Wills Atchison, president; Ruth Thomas Foster, vice president; Dean Gates, recording secretary; Peggy Collins, corresponding secretary; Emma Moxley Richards, treasurer, and Lorraine Lesse Good, parliamentarian. Miss Collins is chairman of arrangements.

VALENTINE LUNCHEON—The Marietta Park Women's Club will hold its ninth annual Valentine luncheon at the Henderson Castle this afternoon at 1 o'clock in honor of its president, Mrs. Ivan H. Sims. Another honor guest of the club will be Mrs. Stanley D. Reed, its founder and first president.

Mrs. Thomas C. Atkeson, Mrs. James L. Darby and Mrs. E. Morgan Pryse, all former presidents, also have accepted invitations. The customary date for the annual party has been changed this year to avoid conflict with the British War Relief card party and fashion show given by the D. C. F. W. C. at 2400 Sixteenth Street Friday, where the Marietta Park Club will have charge of several booths. Mrs. Harold W. Leath is in charge of reservations.

CONTINUES WORK — The women's board of George Washington University Hospital has made its annual appropriation of $300 for the work of its library committee which carries on one of its most important services to the hospital.

The appropriation calls for a trained librarian to give 12 hours weekly to selecting and circulating books among the patients. Miss Clara W. Herbert, librarian of the Public Library, reports that during the past three months 1,250 patients have availed themselves of this service. Mrs. Alfred Lawson is chairman of the committee.

Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin, wife of the president of the university, heads the board. Mrs. Walter Bloedorn is general chairman of committee planning a series of benefit parties to raise money for new hospital equipment.

Today Mrs. Winfred Overholser and Mrs. Ernest E. Hadley will be in charge of a bridge luncheon. Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Mrs. Wilbur H. Collier and Mrs. Arthur Grahame head another group which will sponsor a spring party at Wild Acres, Mrs. Grosvenor's home near Bethesda, in the spring.

Mrs. Bloedorn and Mrs. Gustav Emery are receiving individual contributions from the group associated with them; Mrs. Lloyd Sutton and Mrs. Joseph H. Roe head another group; Mrs. Robert W. Bolwell and Mrs. G. Louis Weller are planning a luncheon in April; Mrs. Robie N. Evans, Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, Mrs. Miriam Hilton and Mrs. Eugene Byrnes are cochairmen of two other groups whose plans have not yet been made.

NEW OFFICERS—Mrs. Arthur Francis Swinburne has been elected president of Alpha Chapter of Sigma Tau Gamma sorority.

Other new officers include Mrs. Willoughby W. Hutchinson, vice president; Miss Helen Elizabeth Curtin, corresponding secretary; Mrs. James F. Humphrey, recording secretary; Miss Marjory Logan, treasurer; Mrs. Walter L. Taylor, historian; Mrs. William A. Jewby, editor of the sorority newspaper, Station STG; and Mrs. Paul Hoddinott, marshal.

Plans are under way for a "Sweetheart" Valentine dance on Saturday, at the Kennedy-Warren.

Sigma Kappa Secretary Visiting Local Chapters

Miss Betty Spencer, of Buffalo, traveling secretary of Sigma Kappa Sorority, arrived in Washington yesterday, to visit Beta Zeta Chapter at the University of Maryland for three days and then inspect the George Washington University chapter. Miss Spencer received her A. B. from Cornell University, where she specialized in government and international law.

Saturday she will attend the Panhellenic luncheon as honor guest of the sorority. Mrs. Paul G. Russell will also be a guest of honor.

Altrusa Club To Discuss 5-Point Program

The five-point program adopted by the International Altrusa Clubs will be discussed by the Washington Altrusa Club at its dinner meeting tomorrow night at the Broadmoor. The program is the organization's plan for meeting the recurring question, "What can women do for National Defense?"

Miss Margaret Jones, a member of the American Friends Service Committee, who has recently returned from Europe, will discuss current European conditions. Miss Jones will be introduced by Miss Bertha Nienburg, assistant director of the United States Women's Bureau, who will also lead the discussion. Miss Edith R. Macauley, president of the local Altrusa, will preside.

Registration of the various skills of business and professional women to make such information available for defense purposes is the first point in the International Altrusa program. Special forms are being distributed to members of the more than 170 organizations in all parts of the country.

The second point urged is study and support of national consumer protection programs as directed by Dr. Harriet Elliott, of the National Defense Advisory Commission.

south by allowing the Royal Air Force a free hand to bomb the Rumanian oil fields, pipelines and ports, thus damaging the Reich's chief source of supply.

Preparations for such a move have been under way for three months. The petroleum districts were within range of bombers based in Greece. Considerable mapping and staff work on the problem have been done.

This morning Sir Reginald Hoare, the British minister to Rumania who was about to resign for reasons of health when the war started, called on Premier Ion Antonescu to inform him that Great Britain was severing diplomatic contact with the puppet Rumanian state.

More than two weeks ago British Minister George Rendell warned the Sofia government that Bulgarian passive resistance to a German army of occupation would be regarded by London as sufficient excuse to allow Royal Air Force bombing of railways, roads, bridges, airfields and other strategic objectives.

Prime Minister Churchill's speech, which was sufficient in its implications, was received with displeasure by the government and when rebroadcast by the Sofia radio, it was drastically cut.

Warning From Col. Donovan

Bulgaria has already received similar warning from Col. William J. Donovan, President Roosevelt's personal envoy to Europe, who emphasized that America was backing Britain to the end and pointed out that no mercy could be expected for Bulgarian claims if she did not remain out of the war. But it would seem that the situation is already too far gone. A highly placed diplomat in Sofia said tonight in reference to the Germans:

"I don't know when they are coming, but they are coming very soon."

Germans dressed in civilian clothes have been pouring in during the last few weeks and one Sofia diplomat estimated their number ran into the thousands. The latest groups have passports dated only February 6 and marked under reason for travel—"professional purposes."

Germans are rapidly taking over supervision of airports, although there is not yet any confirmation that they have assumed control of the Bulgarian air force. It is believed some German antiaircraft guns have been recently set up and that German army trucks have entered the country.

All Bulgarian locomotives have been ordered repaired and ready for use Wednesday. The personnel of the railroads leading from east to west have been shifted to the north-and-south lines. Night passenger trains in various parts of the country have ceased functioning for two days.

The north-and-south railroad system is being rapidly improved and bridges are being strengthened, according to reliable sources here. Schools in certain districts are being suspended. The army—which at present numbers only about 15 divisions—is being concentrated in the south and southeast. Airports are being improved and German technicians are in evidence.

The Danube River today was free of ice at Giurgiu and is in a condition to be traversed by pontoon bridges. The Germans have dozens of these ready in Rumania and twice made practice attempts in Rumanian territory north of the railroad at Cernavoda, which links the Rumanian Dobrudja to the old kingdom.

Although the Greeks are continuing to fight hard and with some success in Albania, it is learned that oral German warnings were transmitted to the foreign office a short time ago cautioning the Greeks against permitting too much British armed aid to concentrate there. It was particularly emphasized that no British forces would be tolerated in Saloniki, from which the Vardar River campaign started in the last war, thrusting into the heart of the Central Powers.

From Susak on the Yugoslav-Italian frontier reports came that Italy is massing new troops in the north Adriatic ports, presumably to build up the already extensive army in Albania. It is said—although without direct confirmation—that the warehouses in Fiume are being used as barracks and that troops are being constantly unloaded from the railroad station at the free port to be transplanted in convoys at night. The Italians already have 300,000 soldiers in Albania and a large reserve force ready to break the Greek line in the northern sector.

The Germans have something more than 300,000 soldiers in Rumania and equipment for many more. A diplomat here today said he had information that nine new divisions of the Wehrmacht would soon move into Rumania and that a force of 34 divisions was concentrated there.

The Yugoslavs have 500,000 men under arms. The Bulgars have 200,000 and are beginning to call up more. The Turks have 500,000 men in European Turkey.

If the Germans are confident they can enter Bulgaria without Turkey's opposition their present army is large enough for the task, even allowing for the disposition of large numbers of troops on the Rumanian-Russian frontier for protective purposes.

If, however, the Turks stick by their previous intentions of attacking Bulgaria in such an instance, it is doubtful that the Bulgarian army would be large enough to hold them back and there is always possibility, if not a likelihood, that the nervous and pro-British Yugoslavs might join in.

Britain Ends Relations

Sir Reginald Hoare, Britain's aged invalid minister, went to the office of Premier Gen. Ion Antonescu at noon, informed him that the parting of the ways had come, and prepared to sail from Constanta with his diplomatic mission for Istanbul.

United States Minister Franklin Mott Gunther arranged to take over Britain's remaining interests in this country.

Sir Reginald's meeting with Antonescu was described by intimates as "exceedingly painful."

A walking stick in his hand and a flower in his lapel, the British minister stepped from his automobile in front of the premier's office. He had to walk around a long line of parked gray German military automobiles to reach the curb.

Antonescu greeted Sir Reginald warmly. For years he was military attache in London and speaks English fluently. They talked for an hour behind closed doors.

When, finally, Antonescu escorted Sir Reginald to the stairs and clasped his hand Britain and Rumania were no longer on diplomatic terms.

Bucharest was blacked out last night and the blackout will be permanent hereafter, a decision taken, the newspaper Curentful said, because "there is danger of air attacks." Blackout instructions were broadcast this morning and householders were warned that violators of antiair-raid regulations will be punished severely.

Nazi Planes Attack Airport In Iceland

By Percival Knauth

Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Feb. 10.—The radius of action afforded the German air force by its bases along the European coastline from the northern tip of Norway to the Bay of Biscay, was strikingly demonstrated yesterday when simultaneous attacks were launched against the British-occupied airport in Iceland and a British convoy ploughing through the Atlantic Ocean 300 miles west of Portugal.

Reykjavik, the capital of Iceland, was circled by long-range German planes on an armed reconnaissance flight and the nearby airport, with its forces of pursuit planes, was strafed with machine-gun fire, the Germans claim.

If the German planes took off from Norway they covered more than 800 miles of open ocean before reaching their objective, which is one of the longest flights ever carried out by the German air force.

These planes are said to have been on a mission of "armed reconnaissance." Judging from past experience, it seems likely they were Dornier flying boats such as last winter flew regularly to England from their bases in northern Germany. The Germans claim all planes returned safely.

Say Nine Ships Bombed

The attack on the convoy off Portugal, on the other hand, was carried out by long-range bombers, apparently of the Focke-Wulf "Kurier" type. Reports state nine ships in all were bombed, three sinking immediately and three being set afire and so seriously damaged that their loss "must be reckoned with."

The German planes, it is stated, attacked "with the precision of military drill, diving low to loose their bombs, in spite of heavy antiaircraft fire from the convoying warships. It is not stipulated whether any planes were lost in the course of this action, but the German high command reports two German planes "missing" following yesterday's operations.

The 24,500 tons of shipping claimed to have been sunk in this action off Portugal, brings the total of sunken tonnage since August 1 last year for this group of long-range bombers to 363,500 tons, according to the German high command report.

All in all, the Germans claim, this group has bombed 85 enemy ships. In addition to tonnage claimed as sunk, it is stated 192,163 tons of shipping has been seriously damaged.

Nazi Bomber Reported Down

Lisbon, Feb. 10 (AP).—A four-engined German bomber, which might have been one of those in the convoy attack off Portugal, made a forced landing last night near the village of Moura, 43 miles southeast of Lisbon. Peasants said the five crewmen changed their uniforms for civilian clothes and fled, probably toward the Spanish border, 70 miles away.

Interest in Washington

By International News Service

The German air raid on Canadian occupation forces in Iceland evoked intense interest and speculation in Washington last night.

Two alternative explanations for the foray were considered in informed quarters. They were:

1—A desire by the German government to suggest to Congress, in its consideration of the lend-lease bill, that the Atlantic might not prove an insuperable barrier to German bombings in the Western Hemisphere should the United States and Germany become at war.

2—The Germans, desiring to test the long range, overseas flying prowess of their pilots possibly for transmediterranean flights, selected Iceland as the convenient objective.

Geographers differ on whether Iceland, an independent parliamentary government acknowledging the soverignty of the Danish crown, lies within the Western or Eastern Hemispheres. The United States has never taken a formal position one way or the other.

Petain Makes Adm. Darlan Next in Line

By G. H. Archambault.

Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, Feb. 10.—Admiral Darlan, minister of the navy and of foreign affairs, tonight was appointed next in line of succession to Marshal Petain as chief of state "should he be prevented from exercising his duties."

Should Admiral Darlan, in his turn, be prevented, the council of ministers would designate a successor by a majority vote.

To this effect a constitutional act signed by Marshal Petain will appear in the Journal Officiel tomorrow. It confirms the eclipse of Pierre Laval and the rise of Admiral Darlan.

Yet it should be stressed that the phraseology differs from that of last July, in that the admiral is placed "under the high authority of the marshal, chief of state." Apart from this notable change the constitutional act and the decree-laws follow precedent. Admiral Darlan becomes vice president of the council of ministers and head of propaganda and information, with control of censorship, press and radio broadcasting.

These measures foreshadow the long-expected formation of a directory composed of ministers "who will control the action of a certain number of secretaries of state as regards application of principles and the general policy of the government."

Summarized, all the new measures replace M. Laval by Admiral Darlan but with insistence on the fact that the latter acts under the authority of the Chief of State.

It is understood other ministries are likely to have new heads but whoever they may be will have to work under Admiral Darlan. It is implied that the admiral henceforth will be charged with negotiations with the German authority in the matter of "collaboration."

Having thus modified his cabinet and assured it of succession, it is understood that Marshal Petain intends to take a few days rest on his Riviera estate at Villeneuve-Loubet where he delights in being considered as a farmer and wine grower.

Meanwhile, there is talk of a "duel between admirals," meaning Admiral William D. Leahy, the American Ambassador in Vichy, and Admiral Darlan.

The allegation is that American pressure was brought to bear to keep Laval out of office with a hint that conditions might be attached to the sending of food and other supplies from America. Both American and French circles in Vichy deny these allegations categorically. It is insisted that Admiral Leahy has proved a very cautious and circumspect diplomat who has never gone beyond the limits of his official functions.

It is becoming more evident each day that Marshal Petain is not amenable to pressure and that in the policy he has determined to follow for the greater good of France, individuals are of no account.

Italian Dead Strew Fields, Greeks Report

By the Associated Press

Athens, Greece, Feb. 10.—The Italians made desperate counter-attacks on Greek lines in Albania in the last 24 hours, but were repulsed every time, leaving the field strewn with dead and wounded, a government spokesman said tonight.

The thrusts were concentrated west of the Drinos River, on the central Albanian front, where fierce fighting has been raging for ten days.

"Italian infantry units received orders to penetrate our lines, but on being greeted with intense fire withdrew, abandoning many dead and wounded," the spokesman said.

"The few survivors were dispersed and pursued by our men beyond their lines. At another point in the same region the Italians made an attack against positions held by our advance units. As they met our fire they gave up after suffering heavy losses. A third attempt was frustrated at its start."

Among the dead, the spokesman said, were two Fascist officers. Nineteen Italians were reported captured.

In still a fourth attack last night, in the Klisura area, the Italians were said to have been picked off by Greek gunners as fast they left their trenches.

(Dispatches from the Yugoslav frontier town of Bitolj said there was violent ground and air fighting along the front and that the Italians used whole mechanized divisions.)

In one sharp battle, dispatches said, the Greeks allowed Italian soldiers to approach within handgrenade range and then cut loose with a terrific burst of machine-gun and rifle fire. They said Greeks, with bayonets fixed, immediately counter-attacked, forcing the Italians to withdraw to a second line of defenses.

D. C. Butlers' 'Blitz Ball' To Aid British

Butlers in many of Washington's fashionable homes will sponsor a "blitz ball" for the benefit of the British War Relief Society, Inc., at the Mayflower Hotel the evening of February 24, it was announced yesterday.

James Coker, butler in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight F. Davis, conceived the idea, and while the butlers have no organization the word got around among them and a list of socially prominent patrons was also obtained.

Approximately 30 butlers joined Coker in the idea.

The honorary patrons are Lord and Lady Halifax, the Minister of the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Close, the Minister of Canada and Mrs. Christie, and the Australian Minister and Mrs. Casey.

The patrons are Hugh D. Auchincloss, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Representative Sol Bloom and Mrs. Bloom, Lady Broderick, Mrs. Robert Brookings, Mr. and Mrs. Neville Butler, of the British Embassy; Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz, Sir Gerald and Lady Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. William Castle, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight F. Crosstown Bus Hearing Today

Leaders of more than a score of civic, business and school groups are expected to appear before the Public Utilities Commission at 2 p. m. today in the District Building, to testify on establishment of a crosstown bus line between Northwest and Northeast Washington.

The petitions for the bus service, while agreeing on need for crosstown transportation, have been divided on the route to be chosen. Military Road and Park Road each has the backing of several groups as the preferable route. Officials said that disagreement on the route might run the hearing into several sessions.

Others confirmed were:

Arlington Man Held in District Traffic Death

A 35-year-old Arlington, Va., man was held by a coroner's jury yesterday for action of the Grand Jury in connection with Washington's fourteenth traffic fatality.

The defendant, Herrell Denson, was alleged to have been driving the car which February 7 struck a pedestrian, Harold P. Johnson, 51, of Brooklyn, as he stood in a safety zone at Twenty-sixth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, according to police.

In Casualty Hospital yesterday Edward Jackson, 35, of Landover, Md., died of injuries received in an automobile accident at Peace Cross, in Bladensburg, Md., February 8.

air force bombers also raided points in southern Abyssinia and Italian Somaliland, including Todenyang, a little outpost near the junction of the Kenya-Sudan-Abyssinia borders northwest of Lake Rudolf, which has alternately been abandoned and occupied by both sides, preceding the war, without bloodshed. It was finally garrisoned by Italians before the outbreak of hostilities.

While the clearance of Libyan areas in the vicinity of El Agheila continued today, the appointment of Gen. Henry Maitland Wilson as military governor of Cyrenaica was announced. He relinquishes command of the army of the Nile. His successor has not been made known. This new move has no bearing on the future status of Libya. It is purely a temporary measure that is being carried out under international law.

Early yesterday morning Royal Air Force bombers blasted Axis warplanes grounded at the Calato airdrome, in Rhodes, with a heavy explosion and two fires resulting among the machines. The Maritza airdrome was similarly attacked.

A small R. A. F. patrol shot down four Fiat fighters in an air battle with a large Italian formation over Kelcyre, in Albania. One British machine was shot down, its pilot bailing out successfully. Other Italian craft were badly damaged.

Malta was again raided early yesterday. Some civilians were injured and private property was damaged. British official sources list four machines missing in the Middle-East, including the Kelcyre casualty.

Italians Abandon Destroyers

Bengasi, Libya, Feb. 10 (AP).—Navy clean-up crews clearing the harbor today reported two Italian destroyers were so badly damaged by R. A. F. bombing before the town surrendered that they were abandoned in the port. The destroyers were not named in the dispatch.

Wreckage of these ships and of four small freighters and two torpedo boats was being removed today. Dock areas, jetties and some naval establishments had sustained bomb damage, but essential harbor facilities were virtually intact.

Validity of D. C. NegligentHomicide Law Before Court

The question of the constitutionality of the District's Negligent Homicide Act—designated to punish drivers whose carelessness causes fatal accidents—was placed before the United States Court of Appeals here yesterday.

Police Judge Walter J. Casey dismissed a charge, filed under the act, against Rufus R. Henderson, who was alleged to have killed a pedestrian while riding a motorcycle "at an immoderate rate of speed" and "in a careless, reckless and negligent manner."

The Government appealed this ruling.

Earl H. Davis, Henderson's lawyer, told the appeal court that the charge was too vague to meet the requirement of the constitution that a defendant be told exactly what crime he is supposed to have committed.

Assistant District Attorney Dennis McCarthy quoted Supreme Court decisions which authorized a trial court to determine the degree of negligence exhibited by an accused person.

Witness Tells How Italians Made Last Stand at Barce

By Alan Moorhead

London Daily Express Writer.

Barce, Libya, Feb. 10 (INS).—My conducting officer and my driver were seriously injured during 20 minutes of the most desperate fighting I am ever likely to see. Alexander Clifford, of the Daily Mail, and I were the only ones of our party who escaped without wounds.

We barely managed to bind the others' wounds and crawl in with them to safety.

We had made a terrific advance through enemy territory in Libya, passing Cyrene, Appolonia and Maraura during the day. When we caught up with a British armored patrol on the outskirts of Barce, east of Bengasi, we joined up with them, pushing on ahead of the main body of advancing Australians.

As we drew closer to the enemy our group captured an Italian colonel and a member of his staff attempting to round up his utterly disorganized force. We came upon horrible wreckage where British Spitfires had machine gunned the road, and saw overturned lorries and groups of disheartened and wounded Italians frantically waving white flag and handkerchiefs at us.

Escape Seemed Hopeless

Then suddenly we came up to the rear guard of the enemy. A group of greeen-uniformed Italians was actually laying oblong mines at a bend of the road and they fled helter-skelter at the approach of the leading British armored car. We jumped out and tore up the mines to make the road safe for the long column of Aussies pouring up from behind.

Our first warning that the enemy was entrenched in mass on a hill ahead was the whizzing past us of the long white treaks of machine gun tracer bullets and 2-pounders. Clifford and I dove for the wooded bank at the side of the road, but escape seemed hopeless—the enemy was firing point blank.

The rest of the patrol scurried toward cover, too, some firing over their shoulders as they ran. The armored car next to ours was hit and burst into flames, killing the occupants. I heard muffled screams as a man hit half a dozen times in the legs was dragged along a ditch by his companions through a whirl of bullets.

I saw an officer running through a hail of bullets along the line or armored cars retrieving the first aid kits. Our driver was badly hit in the eye. I tore a bandage off my leg, cut strips from Clifford's sweater and bandaged him.

Armored Car Hit

But then the Italian gunners spotted us. They crept closer and blew our armored car to bits while we weren't more than five yards away. The injured staunched their flowing blood and then a shrapnel fragment struck my conducting officer who pitched headlong on top of our wounded driver at our feet.

By now the whole line of armored cars was abalaze and the Italians turned their fire full force on us as we were dragging the driver to a copse of bushes and the wounded officer was pulling himself along behind us.

As we passed open spaces the Italian fire rained around us and it was a long nightmare scramble. It was dusk and we stopped frequently to staunch the bleeding of the driver and officer.

We were finally picked up by a British patrol. Before we reached the first aid post the Aussies came up, encircled the hill, drove off the Italian gunners, and captured the position.

I was able to view the shell-battered wreckage of our typewriters and cameras which were in the armored cars. Clifford's thigh was grazed by a bullet and there was a neat hole through the sleeve of my greatcoat.

But it was the enemy's last stand. They started running and they're running still.

British Vessel Capsizes With Cargo of Pig Iron

By the Associated Press

Lewes, Del., Feb. 10.—A ship with a cargo of pig iron destined for England lay half-submerged in Delaware Bay tonight while agents for the 5,971-ton British freighter Ramon de Larrinaga studied salvage problems.

Beached on Marshall Shoal, 3 miles off the Delaware breakwater, the vessel turned over on its port side just before dawn today, ending a two-day struggle in heavy seas. It was towed to the breakwater last night from a point 75 miles off Atlantic City, after its cargo shifted, causing it to list badly.

The Larrinaga's Philadelphia agents declined to say what will be done with the freighter and its cargo.

Coast Guardsmen rescued all but one of the 48-man crew. Archibald McLean, 21, a fireman, was reported missing. Chief Engineer Lewis Kinread, 57, suffered a broken leg and eight others received cuts and bruises.

Crewmen praised 15-year-old Charles Smith, youngest of the crew, who worked 24 hours without rest, feeding coal to the fires with his bare hands until the engine room was in water up to the firebox.

Golden Gift . . .

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES GOLDSMITH receive from Morris Cafritz a "Golden Book" with which to record names of donors to the Goldsmith Educational Fund

A golden wedding anniversary gift of $300 from friends of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith was still growing yesterday—and as fast as it grew, the Goldsmiths were making plans to give it away to someone else.

The gift, to be added to the Goldsmith Educational Fund for the college education of needy boys and girls, was presented to them at the reception in their honor Sunday night at the Jewish Community Center. The couple was given a "Golden Book" with names of donors to the fund, with Morris Cafritz making the presentation.

The fund was established on their twenty-fifth anniversary, and in the crowd of several hundred at the reception were some of the persons whose education was furthered by the fund. Mr. and Mrs. Goldsmith's other philanthropies were praised by friends at the reception. The date of the anniversary was January 28—but the celebration was even bigger by being belated.

Odd Jobs

Dr. Hrdlicka Starts With Head To Get to the Foot of Things

Scholarly Ales Hrdlicka has the unique job of collecting human skulls for the Smithsonian Institution.

For 38 years, interspersed with periodic trips to Asia, Alaska, South America, Africa and Europe, he has worked in a small, skull-studded office in the National Museum, Tenth and Constitution Avenue Northwest.

In that time, he has gathered the world's largest collection of skeletons and skulls—16,000 of them—representing every race of known humans.

An anthropologist for 50 years, Dr. Hrdlicka has concentrated on the study of early Americans. After making extensive field trips to the West, to Alaska and to Mexico, he discovered some of his best specimens near Washington.

Two of the largest normal skulls in existence he found only 60 miles away, in southern Maryland near Annapolis.

Now, the anthropologist says, he has "definite proof" that American Indians were descended from Asiatic tribesmen. Remains collected on both continents indicate that the Indians originally migrated from Siberia. They did not come in a wholesale migration of the brain, and even what but in small groups, he added.

Furthermore, they brought with them a "rather advanced culture" and were an exceptionally healthy people, free from constitutional diseases, he pointed out.

These traits and many others can be seen in the skeletal remains, according to the scientist. Such things as the diseases suffered, the type of work done, the size the dead man liked to eat can be told by variations in the skull and skeletons, he explained.

Dr. Hrdlicka came up the hard way to his present position as a world authority on skulls and early Americans. Born in Bohemia 72 years ago, he was brought to America by his family at the age of 13. He then spent about 20 years in preparation for his present job.

Alligator Bait . . .

That piece of legal intelligence yesterday morning climaxed the successful hunt for a missing alligator in the subterranean regions of the Department of Commerce. So the alligator was returned to the Zoo, and the aquatic director of the Y. M. C. A., who was to wrestle it, returned to the "Y" building from the Ambassador pool, perhaps with a little relief in his mood.

The alligator was borrowed by Fred Orsinger, director of the Commerce aquarium, on Friday, from Dr. William M. Mann, director of the zoo. The six-foot reptile escaped, was discovered yesterday morning just in the nick of time. A. W. Clime, Commerce Department building superintendent, found it in the basement

Clime had not undertaken the search when Orsinger arrived for work yesterday.

"I had promised Joe Aronoff that I'd have an alligator for him to wrestle," Orsinger said. So he left for the Zoo to borrow another.

Aronoff, 24, resides at 647 E Street Northeast, and is aquatic director for the Y. M. C. A. He has never wrestled

At the Zoo, Orsinger was telephoned that Clime had found the alligator, so, he said, he "saw no point in bringing down another."

Instead he hurried back to help capture the beast. However the rassling experiment between man and alligator had to be discarded after all. Somebody discovered it's against the District law.

Youth Congress Hears Stimson On Race Issue

Two opposing factions in the American youth movement wound up their Washington business yesterday with calls on high officials.

Members of the American Youth Congress picketed the War Department with signs charging Army discrimination against Negroes and were met with an unexpected curbstone speech by Secretary Stimson. Later a Youth Congress delegation saw French Ambassador Henry-Haye and spent an hour discussing India with undersecretaries at the British Embassy.

Meanwhile, representatives of the National Foundation for American Youth, an organization sponsored by Gene Tunney, delivered a letter to Representative J. Parnell Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, urging the Dies Committee to investigate the American Youth Congress for "Fifth-Column activities."

Assures Representation

Secretary Stimson emerged from the Munitions Building with a press aide and a stenographer after a Youth Congress delegation was denied admittance to the building to see him. He looked over the 100 pickets, doffed his hat and addressed the throng while the stenographer took down his remarks.

"I can assure you," he said, "that the colored population will be given proportionate representation in the United States Army."

The slight, gray-haired Cabinet member told the youths that he had seen their banners from his window and was on his way to lunch. He cautioned them to be sure of their facts when they "start a crusade," and added:

"I am the first Secretary of War to have appointed a colored officer to be a brigadier general . . . I am the second Secretary of War who has appointed a colored person as civilian aide . . . And, finally, I am now starting the organization of a pursuit squadron to be composed of colored personnel, including pilots."

Tuskegee Squadron

The squadron, he explained, would be organized and trained at Tuskegee, Ala. Training of some of its personnel already has been started by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, he said.

The A. Y. C. delegation that called at the French Embassy was led by Mrs. Helen Simon, chairman of the American Youth Fellowship campaign. They told the Ambassador they had heard 1,000 young Spanish Loyalist refugees in France were about to be shipped back to certain doom in Franco Spain.

Henry-Haye promised to cable his government to find out the facts and convey their interest in the case, Mrs. Simon said.

Another inquiry was set on foot at the British Embassy. Refused an opportunity to see Lord Halifax, the youths saw several undersecretaries, and asked the whereabouts of 20 Indian students who, they said, had been reported jailed by British authorities for anti-war activities in India.

Youth Congress Attacked

The 20 had studied in the United States and were acquaintances of Youth Congress members.

The youths who called on Representative Thomas charged that the Youth Congress, by raising money to bring Spanish loyalist refugees to Latin America, was trying to "ood his hemisphere with Stalinist agents from abroad."

Thomas said he would present their letter to the Dies Committee, if the committee is recreated by the House today. A resolution recreating the committee has been granted an hour of debate today by the Rules Committee.

Lithuanians Here to Mark 'Fourth of July'

Members of the Lithuanian colony of Washington will commemorate the twenty-third anniversary of their homeland's declaration of Independence Sunday, while lamenting Russia's acquisition of its territory.

P. Zadeikis, Minister to Lithuania, yesterday pointed out an ironic parallel in the two dates, 23 years apart: "Lithuania declared her independence on February 16, 1918, in her historic capital, Vilnius, at a time when the country was under German military occupation. Now Lithuania finds herself occupied by numerous Red Army divisions of the neighboring Soviet Union which no longer poses as a 'friend'."

A communication from the Lithuanian Legation further pointed out that "reports of refugees also indicate the fact that the Soviets are evacuating from Lithuania into the interior of Russia all machinery from the industrial establishments. What can be the meaning of that? It certainly reminds one of the Russo-German war of 1914-15."

"A small modest tea" for members of the American Lithuanian Society of Washington will be given at the legation from 5 to 7 on the afternoon of the anniversary, the Minister said. Earlier in the day, there will be a mass at the Church of the Immaculate Conception at 10:30 a. m., he said.

Members of the society will gather for luncheon at 1 p. m. at the Willard Hotel, the Minister said, but all the events will be a commemoration rather than a celebration, he added.

The Minister also released a message on Lithuania's Independence Day from Robert P. Skinner, former Ambassador to several Baltic states, who said in part:

"Perhaps it is not too much to say that the Lithuanian spirit is more alive today than ever before because living men and women for a generation have tasted the sweets of liberty, of an ordered existence . . .

"The suggestion that in the Europe of today there is no place for the smaller states is complete nonsense, arising out of the predatory instincts of those who make it. As well might we Americans say that we no longer need our Rhode Island and our Delaware. A homogeneous nation like Lithuania, a nation with a history, language, religion and culture of its own may suffer misfortune but can never die . . ."

Group Health Put on Sidelines As Issue in Antitrust Case

Harris County (Tex.) Medical Society, five A. M. A. officials and 15 Capital physicians.

Dr. Hugh Cabot, Boston surgeon, yesterday completed the testimony he began Friday, and was followed by Dr. Bowman C. Crowell, associate director of the American College of Surgeons. Zimmerman was the next witness called by the prosecution, headed by John Henry Lewin, special assistant to the Attorney General.

Zimmerman, now senior staff officer of the Council of Personnel Administration, was describing the events leading up to the founding of GHA, a Federal workers' medical care cooperative, when a drumfire of objections by Leahy finally elicited the Proctor ruling.

Under questioning by Lewin, Zimmerman told how he had supervised a compilation of sick leave taken during the last three months of 1936 by employes of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, a Federal Home Loan Bank Board unit. Before he could tell the jury the total or estimate the loss to the Government in dollars, Leahy challenged the official's fitness to continue because he himself had not made the compilation, only supervised it.

Siring of Objections

These figures were presented to Congress shortly after the GHA clinic was opened on downtown I Street as part of the explanation why HOLC allotted $40,000, variously called a loan or grant, to start the medical care enterprise.

When Lewin persisted, asking Zimmerman the size of sick leave losses and what he learned in his investigation of group care schemes elsewhere, Leahy countered with a string of objections, all sustained by the bench.

At one time the Government counsel was shaking his finger in Leahy's face, while the latter recoiled in his chair and shielded his eyes in mock fear. The jurors, most of them, just smiled.

"For the purposes of this trial," said Justice Proctor, "GHA is taken to be a legal group. If we are going into its motivation, we might as well go back 130 years and discuss also what activated the beginning of the American Medical Association."

Still Lewin continued to probe, through questioning of Zimmerman, into the beginnings of GHA, despite the barbs of Leahy in the form of sustained objections. Eventually he became so nettled as to shout:

"I only want to show that Group Health was not 'half baked.' That was the impression from that 'godmother and godfather' remark."

A. M. A. Action Related

In his opening statement to the jury, Leahy said certain research funds were the "godmother and godfather" of GHA, whose operations the 4 medical organizations and 20 individual defendants are accused of impeding.

Lewin's blast at Leahy, in which he was joined by Grant W. Kelleher, fellow member of prosecution counsel, brought the ruling by Justice Proctor that the origin of GHA is not an issue in the case, nor even the clouded $40,000 "loan" by which it was launched.

It was while Dr. Crowell was on the stand that the Government entered as evidence the record of action taken by the A. M. A.'s house of delegates, its governing body, at the 1934 convention in censuring the American College of Surgeons.

The latter had incurred the larger organization's wrath by approving a report by its medical service board which recognized "that the periodic prepayment plan providing for the costs of medical care of illness and injury of individuals and of families of moderate means offers a reasonable expectation of providing them with more effective methods of securing adequate medical service."

No Paricular Plan in Mind

Such approbation, according to the A. M. A., was "confusing" and "harmful" and "embarrassing," an uncalled-for expression of attitude treading on ground that belonged to the larger group of doctors. (A. M. A. membership today is in excess of 110,000, compared with 13,000 in the American College of Surgeons, most of whose members also are in the A. M. A.).

After reciting its grievances, the A. M. A. resolved to express "condemnation of such tactics and that this attempt of the board of regents (of the A. C. S.) to dominate and control the nature of medical practice is to the detriment of professional ideals and the welfare of the public."

Under cross-examination by Leahy, Dr. Crowell said the Medical Service Board had no particular group health plan in mind when it made its report, after nearly a year's study.

In his first appearance on the witness stand, Dr. Cabot, a member of the A. M. A., but one of its severest critics, said he does not think hospital staff doctors should have to be members of their local medical societies. Leahy objected to the question, but was overruled.

Penniman Testifies Today

The association, whose headquarters are in Chicago, fulfills a useful purpose in helping keep hospital standards high, but its activity in this regard should be advisory, not dictatorial, Dr. Cabot declared.

Without retracting his previous testimony that the A. M. A. weekly Journal is the world's greatest publication of its kind, the Boston surgeon nevertheless criticized its medical economics policies, charging that many of its articles in this field, "produced to effect a certain point of view," could be "torn limb from limb in a scientific discussion."

William F. Penniman, first president of Group Health Association, will folllow Zimmerman on the stand today, Lewin said last night. Dr. Michael Davis, of New York, an expert on distribution of medical care, was to have testified yesterday, but was prevented from doing so by illness.

Farm Program Being Changed As War Buffer

Copyright by New York Times

Important changes in the Federal farm program are being worked out in the Department of Agriculture with the encouragement of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, high officials revealed yesterday. The program is being drafted in an effort to cope with the price and market disturbances due to the war abroad and ease the economic and social effects of the war emergency on low-income farm groups.

The far-reaching steps being considered in almost daily conferences of officials would affect at least four major phases of the large-scale Government operations included in the present farm program.

1. In the home market, the plan would establish a "two-price" system for the large "basic" surplus farm crops whose export markets have been severely reduced by war—cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco and rice.

A domestic marketing quota and surplus quota would be established for each crop; prices would be maintained at or near a parity with other prices for the domestic quota; the surplus quota would be disposed of at a discount.

2. In the foreign market, the Federal Government would act for the farmers. Surpluses of the five crops defined as "basic" would be segregated in what would be virtual government pools. The Government would manage the pools, and do the dealing with other governments in seeking export outlets through sale or barter, and pro-rate the proceeds back to the producers.

3. Among the farmers, the national marketing quota would be divided up, farm by farm. The question of using individual quotas would be put up to the producers in referendums, similar to those now being planned for the first time this year among producers of corn and wheat.

4. For low income groups, a larger share of Federal funds would be used to distribute farm surpluses among the needy through the stamp plan. Systematic health and nutritional work would be attempted as a national defense measure. Producers of crops hardest hit by war, such as cotton and tobacco, would be offered incentive payments to encourage home production of nutrition foods. The present minimum payment of $20 per farm would be much increased, to perhaps double, or even close to $50.

Civil Liberties Chairman Tells Of Tapped Wires

By the Associated Press

Miss Josephine Truslow Adams, a teacher at Swarthmore College, Pa., told a House Judiciary subcommittee yesterday that her home telephone wires had been tapped intermittently since she became chairman of the Civil Liberties Committee at Philadelphia.

Asked whether she believed the FBI was responsible, she said, "I wouldn't say it was. I don't know."

"Everybody who defends civil liberties really effectively, really militantly," she declared, "is sooner or later accused of trying to sabotage the defense program."

Miss Adams urged rejection of the wiretapping bill because "when you allow a thing like wiretapping the next thing will be forced labor camps, or something."

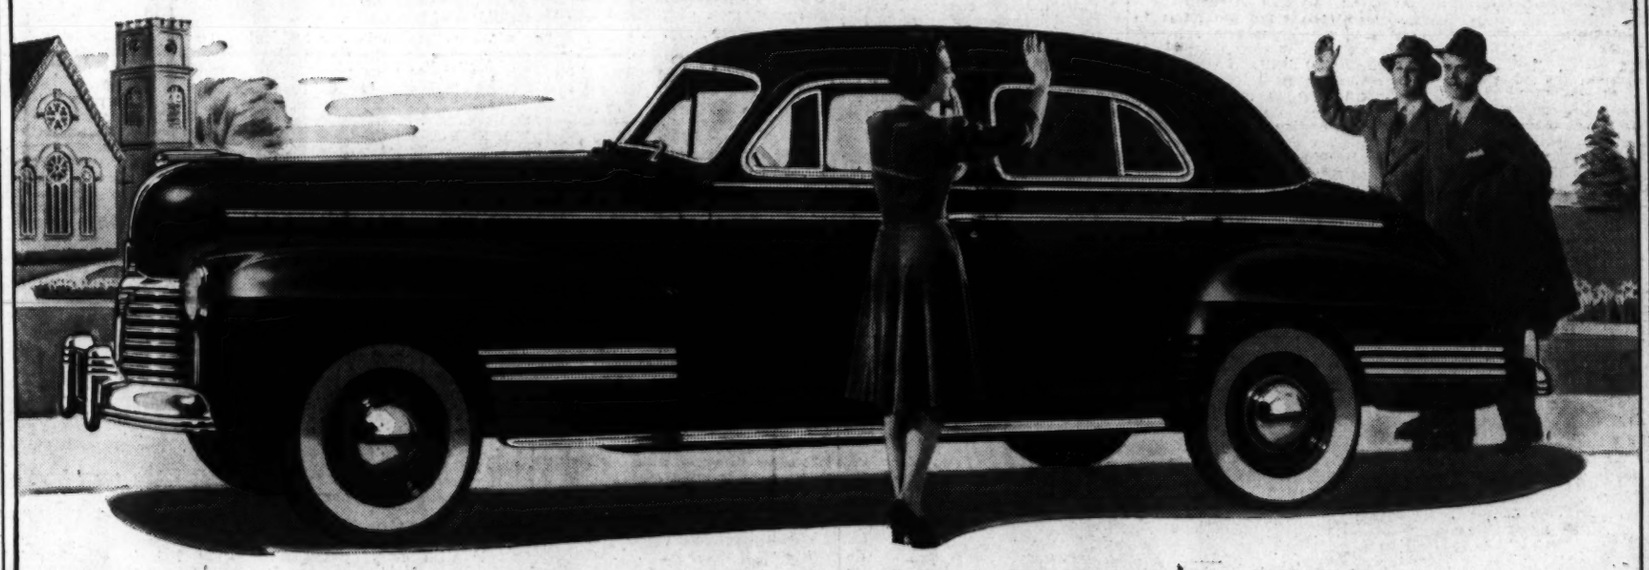
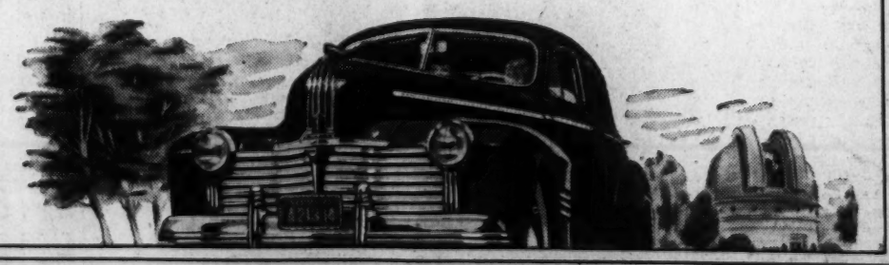
Pontiac and Fisher Body present General Motors' Newest 8-Cylinder Sedan at the lowest price of all!



The Metropolitan "Torpedo" Sedan

Eight-Cylinder Model, $946 (white sidewall tires extra)*



Available as a Six at an Even Lower Price

IN COLLABORATION with Fisher Body designers, Pontiac has just created a handsome new addition to its lowest-priced line—the Metropolitan "Torpedo" Sedan. As an eight, Pontiac offers this brilliant new style at the lowest price available anywhere. As a six, it comes at an even lower price.

Four-door, four-window design enables engineers to give the Metropolitan more pronounced streamlining and greater rear seat privacy than six-window styling permits. In addition, it provides generous room in both front and rear compartments and a highly sophisticated type of beauty.

The new Metropolitan rounds out the most complete and inviting line of low-priced cars in Pontiac's history—six arresting models, each one a standout in style, comfort, handling ease and economy. Make Pontiac the car to see first when you buy—and remember always that if you can afford any new car, you can afford a new Pontiac "Torpedo"!

Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

The Immigration and Naturalization Service is laying plans to crack down on certain German-American leaders in New York and Chicago, The Post learned last night.

It will attempt to revoke the citzenship of bund chieftains and send them back to Germany. Investigators of the agency have been gathering evidence which, it was said, tends to prove that some bund members gained their American citizenship by false statements.

The agency is working now on what it believes to be its best cases, in which the evidence appears to be conclusive. It plans to take these cases to court, and, if successful, to launch a widespread inquiry into activities of bund members.

Membership in the bund, Justice Department attorneys will contend, is inconsistent with the citizenship oath.

It is possible, it was reported also, that similar action may be taken against Communists who have recently become American citizens.

The rights of Uncle Sam to revoke citizenship was upheld by the Supreme Court in the case of Johannessen vs. U. S. in 1912.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service recently established its own investigative force to check up on aliens who failed to register under the Alien Registration Act, or who made fraudulent statements in registering. The forthcoming actions against bund members in Chicago and New York are a result of work in the investigations division, which is headed by J. R. Espinsa.

House Appropriations Committee yesterday told the House that for every Internal Revenue agent employed the Government collected $80,000 in taxes, or a return of $20 for every dollar spent. An agent costs Uncle Sam about $4,000 a year. Aiming at larger tax returns, the committee recommended that funds be appropriated to add 500 agents. Funds also were included in the annual appropriation bill to hire 127 employes in the bureau's technical staff field divisions, 74 assistant technical advisers, 16 accountants and auditors, and 37 clerks. The new agents will examine income tax returns to make sure that the Government is paid its full share. Bureau officials testified that 220,000 cases should be examined but personnel isn't available.

The committee report applauded the President for abolishing the Federal Alcohol Administration and merging it with the Alcohol Tax Unit. It said that $163,240 annually would be saved by the merger and that it had resulted in "improved administration." Some of the old FAA employes think otherwise, however.

The Office of Treasury of the United States was given funds to hire 239 new employes by the committee. This is about 150 fewer employes than the office requested. Twenty-one new employes would be assigned to redeeming savings bonds and silver certificates; 88 would be put to work servicing Social Security checks, and 130 workers would handle the increased number of checks resulting from the defense program.

Dr. L. J. Ragatz, editor of the American Historical Association, a part of Smithsonian Institution, has a very low regard for members of my profession. He recently told a Congressional committee: ". . . so-called historical material is commonly produced by journalists and other untrained people." . . . Customs Service was given funds in the Treasury appropriation bill to hire 60 additional guards . . . Vic Sholis, former Commerce employe, is the Washington representative for the Clear Channel Broadcasting Service.

Representative George H. Mahon, Texas Democrat, quizzed Treasury officials on the methods of selecting attorneys. "I have heard it repeatedly charged," the Texan said, "that some departments . . . tend to favor some particular school like Harvard . . . that someone higher, is from some school, and that he tends to select those from that particular school." L. J. Bernard, assistant general counsel, said that law schools here furnish by far the greatest number of attorneys. Top jobs in the division, he said, are filled by promotions.

Guards at Treasury buildings have been compelled to work a seven-day week because of the shortage of help. There is a large turnover in the guard forces because of the long hours and low pay. Treasury officials pleaded with House Appropriations Committee members to raise the salaries of the guards but the committee refused.

Crop Report Goes Sour

The Agriculture Department's monthly crop report was an hour late yesterday because the experts forgot it was the regular day for official prognosticating.

An official explained the oversight by saying there was no widespread interest in the February report since it deals chiefly with citrus fruits.

Would Frank Warriors' Mail

Boston, Feb. 10 (AP).—A plea to give Uncle Sam's soldiers and sailors free postage "so that they will write the folks back home" won an indorsement today from the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

The House voted to memorialize Congress to exempt the armed services from payment of postage on personal mail.

Board Boosts Tax Payment, Morgan Says

Revenue Increased $200,000 Since Creation of Appeals Unit, Citizens Told

More than $200,000 in additional taxes has been collecetd by the District since the establishment of the Board of Tax Appeals because more real estate taxes are paid by those who feel the funds will be returned if the taxes are found invalid, Jo V. Morgan, sole member of the board, said last night.

Speaking before the Piney Branch Citizens Association, Morgan reported that in the two-and-a-half-year history of the board, 446 appeals have resulted in the return to taxpayers of $238,000.

He credited the tax appeal office with having a "good psychological effect on District taxpayers," as well as alleviating the condition which, prior to 1938, gave taxpayers "virtually no recourse from invalid tax assessments."

Elwood Seal, president of the Piney Branch association, announced appointment of six standing committees for the year.

The citizens approved the Military Road route for the proposed crosstown bus, urged improved playground and auditorium facilities for Macfarland Junior High School, elected Seal as one of two delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations, and called for plans for an annual dinner to be submitted at the next meeting.

Northeast Washington

The proposed bill to provide a public defender in the District was disapproved by Northeast Washington Citizens Association last night. One of the main objections was that "it would cost too much."

In a busy "legislative evening," the association, meeting at Ludlow School, disapproved three proposed bills and approved seven others. Approval was given to bills regulating employment of minors as actors in theaters; prohibiting introduction of contraband into District penal institutions, and prohibiting the assignment of wages in the District.

The association approved, "in principle" bills regulating employment of women in the District; establishing a boundary line between Virginia and the District; regulating the making of small loans here; regulating installment contracts.

In addition to the public defender bill, the association disapproved a bill providing for the election of delegates from the District to national political conventions. The main objection was that such an election might be unfairly cited as an indication of disinterest in genuine suffrage.

Evan H. Tucker presided.

National Gateway

The National Gateway Citizens Association last night urged President Roosevelt to appoint a District resident who has practiced law here to the District Court vacancy left by the resignation of Justice Peyton Gordon.

The association met in the Church of Christ, at Twenty-eighth and Douglas Streets Northeast, and asked that a traffic sign be placed on the east side of Channing Street at Queens Chapel Road Northeast for westbound traffic.

A committee, headed by John Fairburn, was appointed to cooperate with the American Automobile Association in a safety campaign. Other members of the special committee were Alvin Minetree, Anthony J. Caskeski, Everett Evans and Miss Marie C. Nold.

Three new members were admitted to the association, and L. M. Green was appointed the association's representative to the citizens committee drive for funds for the Metropolitan Police Boys Club.

Burleith Citizens

The Burleith Citizens Association last night went on record as favoring the establishment of a crosstown bus route.

The association met in Gordon Junior High School. Members pointed out that none of the proposed crosstown bus routes would be of help to them, but urged that the association favor the principle.

Plans were made for a "booster" dinner meeting February 28, at the Orient Restaurant, Wisconsin Avenue and R Street Northwest, to aid the garden committee build up interest in gardening.

Kalorama Citizens

The Kalorama Citizens Association last night urged the establishment of a crosstown bus route in Northwest Washington.

Preference was expressed for the Klingle-Park Road route, but the association specified the Military Road route as second choice.

Mrs. Helen Moodie discussed the National Symphony Orchestra.

Park View Citizens

The Park View Citizens Association last night "unconditionally opposed" any changes in the bus service through its area, including suggested elimination of several Northwest routes and fewer stops in the express bus service.

The citizens went on record as favoring the proposed crosstown bus, hearings on which will be held today in the District Building. They favored the Park Road route across Rock Creek Park.

West End Citizens

The West End Citizens Association unanimously went on record in opposition to the legalization of horse racing in the District last night at its regular meeting held at the Third Precinct police station, Twentieth and K Streets Northwest.

John F. Kelley, vice president, reported on the effects of legalized pari-mutuel wagering on a community.

George H. O'Connor, the troubadour and new president of the large concern he worked his way up in, discovered yesterday that he is a wealthy man.

His wealth, he observed, is in such a crowd of friends as gave him a testimonial luncheon yesterday at the Willard Hotel.

They brought to O'Connor, who has entertained every President since McKinley, a letter from President Roosevelt which saluted him as "Dear George."

"I think the District Title Insurance Co. has shown true wisdom in selecting you as its president and I am writing this note to wish you all success in the discharge of your new and greater responsibilities for which I believe you are admirably equipped," the President wrote.

"I hope your future years will be as useful as your past and that you will have a full measure of the happiness you have brought into the lives of others."

Stumped for Words

O'Connor is a stout, full-cheeked man who, to Will Rogers' way of thinking, had it all over Al Jolson. But he couldn't crack a smile when he rose to thank the Calvert Club for the testimonial and the many distinguished guests for coming.

"I am rich beyond the dreams of avarice in having such friends as you," he said. "If I have during my journey through this mortal vale caused sunshine to others as you say, then I had as much fun as anybody." Greatest credit he gave to his wife, who "kept the home fires burning while I was leaping about from banquet to banquet."

The Rev. John M. McNamara, Auxiliary Bishop of the Baltimore and Washington Archdiocese, told O'Connor he "has a heart of gold. He is worthy of the best we can do for him," said Bishop McNamara.

O'Connor made a great reputation as an entertainer and his career was characterized by wholesomeness in all of his songs and stories. He never resorted to off-color entertainment, Bishop McNamara reminded. O'Connor might easily have gone to Broadway as an entertainer, and the reason he didn't embraces a worthwhile philosophy, said the Bishop. "The art of living a life is even better than that of making a living," he observed.

District Commissioner J. Russell Young paid tribute and recalled he had known O'Connor for 45 years. The Calvert Club adopted resolutions expressing its affection and esteem and presented O'Connor with a framed scroll of this proceeding. William H. Collins, attorney, and president of the club, presided.

The singing yesterday, by Fred East, Bill Raymond, Ed Steffe, Bernard Fitzgerald, Charles Tittman and George Myers, was dedicated to O'Connor. The song was composed by Harry P. Somerville, Willard Hotel manager. Here's a snatch of it:

"Though rivals come, though rivals go
All dolled up to steal his show,
In springtime or summer
In winter or fall
O'Connor is king of them all."

Five clubs sent representatives to the luncheon—Gridiron, J. H. Cunningham; Alfalfa, Charles T. Light; Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, Martin J. McNamara; Military Order of Carabao, Col. Joseph Heller, and Rotary, Bert Nye. Congress and Washington business interests were widely represented abong the guests.

Postlude

Opera Stars Close Musical Morning Series

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Mrs. Lawrence Townsend presents Lotte Lehmann (Paul Ulanovski, accompanist) and Lauritz Melchior (Ignaz Strasfogel, accompanist) on Monday morning in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom. Program of songs and operatic excerpts by Grieg, Koerling, Sibelius, Henriques, Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Richard Strauss, Bohm, Bransen, Rogers, Johann Strauss and Wagner.

With the presentation of Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchoir in a joint recital yesterday in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom, Mrs. Lawrence Townsend brought to a close her series of musical mornings. For her subscribers the occasion had a note of sadness inasmuch as the printed program contained the announcement that she will be unable to continue her sponsoring activities next season. The two distinguished singers from the Metropolitan Opera were the last in the long procession of artists whom she has brought to Washington during the last 18 years. Into the words, "at least for the present," her friends read the intimation that her retirement may not be irrevocable.

Lauritz Melchoir opened the recital with a group of songs in Norwegion, Swedish, Finnish and Danish, Grieg's "Eros" being followed by Koerling's "Hvita Rosor," Sibelius' "Swarta Roser" and Henriques' "Foraarsang." His second group contained Walter Bransen's "Music of the Spring," the late James H. Rogers' "The Star" and "Nur Eine Waffe Taugt," from "Parsifal." As usual, he put upon his tenor voice the strain of the heroic manner, sometimes to the detriment of its tonal quality, though there were moments of relaxation when its lyric eloquence emerged.

Lotte Lehmann confined herself to a tried octet of lieder; Schumann's "Widmung" and "Der Nussbeau," Schubert's Liesbesbotschaf" and "Der Erlkoenig," Brahms' "Vonewiger Liebe" and "Boischaft," and Richard Strauss' "Allerseelen" and "Standchen." In her readings she was not always guiltless of retarded tempi and a breathiness of tone.

Midway in the recital the two vocalists were heard in Bohm's "Still wie die Nacht," "Schumann's "Am Fenster" and the duet, "Wer uns getraut" from the Johann Strauss operetta "Der Ziegeunerbaron." Appearing together again, they closed the program with the first act finale from "Die Walkuere."

Job Placement In D. C. Shows Continued Gain

Job-finding in the District is "looking up"—way up.

The D. C. Employment Center filled 4,971 jobs in the last month, one of the highest figures for any month in the history of the service and 54.9 per cent increase over the corresponding month of last year.

Edwin W. Jones, director, yesterday said that January was the twenty-ninth consecutive month with an increase in placements over the corresponding month of the preceding year.

Increased activity in industry and building trades was reflected in the 1,516 placements last month, compared with only 622 during the same month last year—an increase of 143.7 per cent.

Hotel and restaurant placements, with a total of 674, were up 101.8 per cent over last year; commercial and professional placements, with 716, were up 26.1 per cent; domestic and service placements, with a total of 2,065, were up 22.5 per cent.

The active file of those seeking employment is considerably under the figure for last year, Jones announced. The 28,775 employment applications in the active file at the end of January represented a 24.9 per cent decrease as compared with the 38,314 on January 31, 1940. New applications for employment showed a decrease of 7.1 per cent, with a total of 4,274 in January, compared with 4,598 in January, 1940.

Local original claims for unemployment compensation also reflected better times. These claims totaled 3,031 during January, compared with 5,364 during January, 1940, a decrease of 43.5 per cent. Local continuing claims filed through the center during January totaled 22,209, compared with 29,924 for the corresponding month of last year, a decrease of 25.8 per cent.

Bar Urges D. C. Lawyer For Justice

Virginia Judge Will Sit Here To Help Reduce Crowded Docket

Citing the lagging docket of the District Court, the directors of the District Bar Association yesterday urged President Roosevelt to appoint an able Washington lawyer to the seat vacated by the retirement of Justice Peyton Gordon last week.

The court acted to clear out congested cases by inviting a Virginia Federal judge to sit here next month and assigning a third to criminal sessions, where trials are falling behind.

The bar directors, in a resolution, pointed out that Justice Gordon was a local attorney before he ascended the bench and that a large percentage of the District's work is of a local nature.

Accordingly, the directors said they believed, "It is to the interest of the general public that the vacancy be filled by the appointment of a member of the bar of the District who has been engaged in general practice in the District and is familiar with our laws and rules of procedure to the end that said person, immediately upon his elevation to the bench, will be in position to carry his fair burden of the work."

No Candidate Mentioned

The directors did not nominate any particular candidate. Francis W. Hill, jr., president of the bar association, said that the bar might indicate its preferences at a general meeting next Monday night when a committee on the subject will report.

The civil docket of the District Court, congested for years, was estimated last month to be in such condition still that civil cases must wait 12 to 16 months for hearing, after they are ready for trial.

Judge Alfred D. Barksdale, of the Western District of Virginia, will come here March 10, to hold court 25 days, thus temporarily filling the vacancy left by Justice Gordon's resignation.

Judge Barksdale was invited to the jurisdiction by Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner, of the United States Court of Appeals here, who is the senior judge of this circuit.

Appointed a Year Ago

Judge Barksdale, who lives in Lynchburg, was appointed to the bench by President Roosevelt on February 5 last year. His task in Washington will be made easier by the fact that for more than two years all Federal courts have followed the same rules of civil procedure, as promulgated by the Supreme Court. Formerly the rules of Federal courts differed in every State.

Justice F. Dickinson Letts, who is recovering from an eye operation, will sit in criminal sessions when he returns to the bench, probably next week. Already in criminal court are Justices James M. Proctor and James W. Morris. However, Justice Proctor will be occupied for months with the American Medical Association antitrust trial, so that in effect District Attorney Edward M. Curran has only one court in which to proceed, instead of the normal two.

Sometimes, when the criminal work has lagged, there have been three judges in criminal sessions.

The records showed yesterday that at the close of business Saturday 316 criminal cases were awaiting trial, compared with 102 on February 9, 1940, and 205 February 10, 1939.

125 Held in Jail

"Presumed innocent until convicted," according to the law, but locked in jail just the same, waiting for their cases to be heard, were 125 persons on Saturday. Most of these could not furnish bail. A few were held without bond.

Among the 316 pending criminal cases were 9 first degree murder cases, 6 second degree murder cases and 9 manslaughter cases. The trial of homicide cases generally takes about two court days each, so that the 24 pending cases will take 48 court days, or nine and a half court weeks.

Five other pending cases are expected to take about a court week each to try. To this must be added the time needed for trial of an antitrust case involving the gypsum industry, which is expected to require several weeks.

Additional burdens for the criminal sessions may result from the activities of three special grand juries now conducting investigations here.

Businessmen Call for Wage Clause Ban

The Southeast Businessmen's Association last night called for legislation to outlaw installment plan contracts calling for the assignment of wages in default of payment.

The association, meeting at 314 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast, heard the charge that employers are "put in the middle" when their employes fall behind in installment payments.

Another resolution urged the Police Department to stop placing markers near the scenes of traffic deaths. Members complained that the signs hurt business, since superstitious folk stayed away.

Indorsement was made of the Board of Education's proposal that Congress pass a deficiency appropriation to permit the construction of three new schools in Southeast Washington. The overcrowding is so urgent, it was said, that there should be no delay for a regular appropriation.

The association called for the appointment of 100 additional policemen as soon as possible and urged that Capt. Joseph Morgan, of the Fifth Precinct, be made traffic inspector to replace Inspector William Holmes, who has announced his retirement.

Opposition was expressed to any zoning change in the Mount Dome area, bounded by Alabama, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts Avenues Southeast.

2d Typhus Case Brings Call for Rat Trappers

A second case of typhus reported in Washington within a week yesterday stirred District Health authorities to plot a death-dealing diet of cheese, salmon, chipped beef and straight poison for the rats that carry the disease.

The tasty delicacies are expected to lure the rats in numbers sufficient to permit the Health Department to determine what area the disease carriers cover in Washington. The poison, deadly for rats but harmless for humans and their pets, will come later.

District officials intend to seek the help of local WPA workers to serve as rat trappers and inspectors.

The two typhus victims, a man and a woman, were both employed in an establishment serving food, officials said. Neither is seriously ill nor under quarantine.

Dr. Daniel Seckinger, assistant health officer, said that the establishment had already been inspected and the poison campaign against the rats there has started.

Cleric Assails Sum Spent For Liquor

Per Capita Figure Exceeds Expenditure For Health, Welfare, Dr. Mixon Says

Approximately $50 per capita is spent annually for liquor in Washington while only $30 per capita is spent for health and public welfare activities, it was charged yesterday by the Rev. John L. Mixon, director of the social welfare department of the Federation of Churches.

He spoke at a meeting of the Council of Social Agencies at the Y. W. C. A., representing the Protestant faith in a Protestant-Catholic-Jewish discussion of social welfare problems.

The Catholic group was represented by Msgr. John A. Ryan, of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and the Jewish by Joseph D. Kaufman, vice chairman of the Washington Round Table of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Declaring that liquor-consumption figures show that Washingtonians drink six times more alcoholic beverages in a year than citizens of any other city in the United States, Dr. Mixon urged that some ways and means be devised to control liquor sales and divert money spent for this purpose to other "more worthwhile channels."

He said the local relief problem is "so bad that, being a religious man, I haven't adequate words to express my sentiments."

Msgr. Ryan also lamented the fact the local citizens fail each year to give a full share of their earnings to the Community Chest and other welfare agencies. Our daily life, he added, must be tempered with mercy, justice and love of God.

Quoting from both the New and Old Testaments, Kaufman warned that the simple life is "taking a beating" in these "times of complexity" and urged his listeners to "aim their course along a single route and live up to the teachings of the Bible."

Third Fire Call False, Two Engines in Collision

The third call in 48 hours sent firemen yesterday to the Leeds Building, New York Avenue and Fourteenth Street Northwest.

This time, however, the alarm was false and while two fire engines were damaged in collision en route at Eleventh and F Streets Northwest, no one was hurt.

G. W. Routs Maryland, 61 to 28, at Riverside

Reinhart Tries Out Tallman Line-up Against Terps' Zone Defense; Zunic Stars

By Jack Munhall

Testing out its taller players in practice for Thursday's important game with towering West Virginia, George Washington ran up its third highest score of the season last night in routing poor Maryland, 61-28, before 1,500 fans at Riverside Stadium.

Maryland, suffering its sixteenth straight defeat of a winless season, was a ready guinea pig for the experiments of G. W. Coach Bill Reinhart, who was anxious to find out how his bigger men reacted against a zone defense, which they will encounter against West Virginia.

The Terps, still employing their haphazard passing game which throws the ball to the opposition about half the time, never were in the ball game against the sure-shooting Colonials, who were making their most points since totaling 64 and 69 in two starts with Clemson.

It was the thirteenth victory in 16 games for George Washington, which moved to within half a game of matching the won-and-lost record of Georgetown, local college leaders, and indicated its readiness for tomorrow's tussle with Navy at Annapolis.

Zunic High Scorer

Matt Zunic, leading individual scorer of the District and one of the five "thin men" who started for the Colonials, performed as expected to pace all point getters with six baskets and five charity conversions. Joe Comer, Roy McNeil, Eddie Amendola and Charley Jones, the four other 6-footers in the opening G. W. line-up, also made their presence known, especially Amendola. Eddie, who was returning to the line-up after missing one game with a bad foot, was second in scoring with 13.

Reinhart, keeping all of his smaller players on the bench until the second half, also used Jim Fitz-Gerald, 6-foot-2 sophomore, who only became eligible this month, and Ralph Matera, former Eastern star, along with his "tallies," and Bob made the grade.

For Maryland, the efforts of Jack Gilmore, with nine points, and Bob Porter, with six, were outstanding in the absence of blond Gene Ochsenreiter, the Terps' leading scorer and best player, who was withdrawn from the game, not to return, in the first few minutes after being shaken up in a collision with G. W.'s Joe Comer.

Lead 30-11 at Half

The Colonials, fresh from Saturday's one-sided licking of Furman, wasted no time in putting the game beyond Maryland's reach, chalking up 9 points before Maryland could score and establishing themselves in a 30-11 lead by half time.

Against Maryland's mobile 2-3 zone defense the Colonials made most of their baskets, by either long set shots or follows-up with Amendola doing the bulk of the outside tossing and Zunic and Comer the following. The Colonials also enjoyed a good night at the 15-foot stripe, sinking 11 of 15 foul chances, while Maryland capitalized eight of 14 opportunities.

With Ted Reichwein, a Centralia, Pa., boy, scoring 15 straight points in the second half the George Washington frosh last night won their twelfth victory in 13 starts,

New Pitchers Carry Cards' Pennant Hopes

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Feb. 10.—Two months ago, when fans criticized the St. Louis Cardinals for disposing of five veteran players, General Manager Branch Rickey assured them the club was not deliberately tossing away 1941 pennant chances.

Rickey said capable men were coming up from the farms to plug the gaps and predicted a championship this season, if the pitching comes through.

In the group will be the two leading pitchers last year—Lon Warneke and Bill McGee—each of whom won 16 and lost 10. It also includes Clyde Shoun, the left-hander who was made over from an excellent relief pitcher into a successful starter by Southworth when he took over in June last year.

Among the new hurlers, with their last year's victories and club, are Harry Brecheen, lefthander, Columbus (16); Murry Dickson, righthander, Columbus (17); Henry Gornicki, righthander, Rochester (19); Howard Krist, righthander, Rochester (19); Matthew Surkont, righthander, Decatur (19).

The club's roster also includes three catchers, seven infielders and eight outfielders.

No announcements of signed contracts have been made but the club said today that did not mean no player had signed. Rickey has been called out of the city much of the time since the contracts were mailed

Bobby Riggs Beats Kramer For Net Crown

By the Associated Press

West Palm Beach, Fla., Feb. 10. Former National Champion Bobby Riggs, who had found Frank Kovacs blocking his path throughout the Florida winter tennis circuit, finally captured a trophy today by defeating Jack Kramer, of Los Angeles, 6—3, 6—2, 6—3, in the finals of the South Florida tournament.

Riggs forced the young Californian to play the type of game Bobby likes best—a baseline duel with the points going to the fellow who makes the fewer errors.

Pauline Betz, young Rollins College student, already had annexed the women's trophy by defeating Dorothy Bundy, of Los Angeles, 6—4, 6—2, Sunday.

Kramer also met defeat in the doubles final. He and Wayne Sabin, of Portland, Oreg., the top-seeded combination, lost a thrilling five-setter to Elwood Cooke, of New York, and Hal Surface, of Kansas City. The score was 6—4, 3—6, 6—4, 1—6, 8—6.

Besides his victory with Cooke in the doubles, Surface gained the distinction of handing Kovacs his first singles defeat since the winter tour began. The Kansas veteran eliminated Kovacs in the quarter-finals, 6—4, 6—4, but lost his next match to Kramer.

Golden Gate Racing Meet Is Suspended

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Feb. 10.—The State racing commission today suspended the Golden Gate Turf Club, located across the bay from San Francisco, Chairman Jerry Giesler saying he had been advised by State Steward Chet Jones that the track was unsafe for racing because of heavy rains.

The suspension order will halt racing tomorrow. The commission will meet again Wednesday at Albany to decide if the suspension is to be continued. Indications were that purses and stakes would be cut whenever racing is renewed. Two $5,000 stakes originally carded for this week already had beeen canceled by the management.

The Golden Gate Park at Albany last week filed a petition in bankruptcy, listing liabilities of approximately $600,000, and asking that it be allowed to continue racing. In five days of operation the track handled slightly more than $500,000. Attendance has been poor because of bad weather.

Mrs Marion Davy And Goodwin Win Everglades Medal

By the Associated Press

Palm Beach, Fla., Feb. 10.—Mrs. Marion Davy, of Washington, and Tommy Goodwin, of New York, put together two 37's for a 74 today to win medal honors in the sixth annual mixed foursome tournament at the Everglades Club.

Their score, three over par, was five strokes better than the 79's posted by the next two teams, Mrs. William Hockenjos, Lake Hopatcong, N. J., and William B. Langford, Chicago, and Mr. and Mrs. Briggs S. Cunningham, of Green Farms, Conn.

Elizabeth Hicks, of Pasadena, Calif., one of the Nation's best known feminine golfers, paired with Hugh I. Willoughby 3d, of Port Sewall to score an 84.

National Amateur Champion Dick Chapman and Mrs. E. G. Shaefer, of Philadelphia, qualified for the championship flight with an 83, as did Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., and John Cushman, of Palm Beach, and Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg, of Baltimore, and J. H. McClain, of Palm Beach.

Jane Crum, of Orangeburg, S. C., one of the surprises of the winter tour, and Paul Cushman, of Greenville, S. C., barely qualified for the 16-team championship flight. They had an 86, as did Mrs. H. F. Mack, Easton, Pa., and Alan K. Wylie, Winnetka, Ill.

V. M. I. Defeats V. P. I. in Close Battle, 60 to 52

Lexington, Va., Feb. 10.—V. M. I. and Virginia Tech marksmen peppered the basket from all angles in a sensational shooting exhibition here tonight with the Cadets spurting down the final stretch to win, 60 to 52.

The lead changed hands eight times and the teams were tied nine times before the Cadets pulled ahead to stay.

Eddie Stumpf, V. M. I.'s southpaw senior forward, topped all scorers with 20 points, and three of his teammates, Jack Woodward, Capt. Bob Foster, and Emil Sotnyk, racked up 11 apiece. Buddy Henderson led Tech with 14 markers, followed by Guy Crawford with 13, Frank Montgomery with 10, and Tommy Ingram with 9.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 10 (AP).—Steve Belloise, New York's leading middleweight, tonight soundly defeated Ossie (Bulldog) Harris, slugging Pittsburgh Negro, in ten rounds, jabbing his opponent dizzy and in the sixth flooring him so hard the bell saved him from a knockout. Belloise weighed 152½, Harris 157½.

Connie Mack Favors Indians to Win Flag

Yankees Are Picked to Finish Third; Warns Of a 'Surprise' Team From Philadelphia as He Starts Spring Training

By the Associated Press

Carlsbad, Calif., Feb. 10.—The Cleveland Indians are Connie Mack's choice to win the American League baseball pennant this year.

The 78-year-old manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, who arrived last night with a dozen of his pitchers and catchers and an outfielder, correctly predicted last spring that the champion New York Yankees would finish third.

Even if the Indians win the race this season, however, Mack reiterated his recent declaration that the Athletics are likely to spring a surprise.

"I'm not predicting any pennant or even a place in the first division for us, but I don't think we will be in the cellar."

A's Consistent, at Leas

For the past six years, the Athletics have been the most consistent club in the American League. They have won only between 53 and 58 games each season. Their top percentage has been 389 and their low .346. Four times they have finished eighth and twice seventh.

Discussing possibilities of the coming season, Mack said:

"We have three pitchers we are really counting on this year—John Babich, Bill Beckman and Nelson Potter. And if Chubby Dean, who pitched brilliantly against the Yanks early last season and then faded, can regain that form and hold it, maybe we'll have a fair pitching nucleus."

In the party arriving here were Pitchers Beckman, Potter, Dean, Porter Vaughan, Phil Marchildon, Jim Ferrick, Herman Besse, Lee Roos and Jack Knott; Catchers Frank Hayes and Hal Wagner, Outfielder Carl DeMiles and Secretary "Mac" Macfarlane.

Ken Overlin Held to Draw In Trenton

By the Associated Press

Trenton, N. J., Feb. 10.—Paulie Walker, veteran Trenton ring campaigner, gained a surprise draw with Middleweight Champion Ken Overlin, Washington, D. C., in a torrid 10-round nontitle bout tonight.

A crowd of 2,500 received with approval Referee Paul Cavalier's draw decision, but observers at ringside gave Overlin anywhere from six to eight rounds.

This Morning

Without Shirley Povich

By Ben Dulaney
Post Sports Editor

I found an autograph book yesterday in an old desk drawer. Across the top of the first page was blocked out in crude grade-school characters: WASH. BALL PARK GAME OF SEPT. 8 1923.

DULANEY

Down the page in order were seven pencilled signatures, the first of hundreds in that forgotten book. There was "R. T. Peckinpaugh" with a tremendous "K," the friendly scrawl of "Walter Johnson" and the easy flowing "Babe Ruth," such mincing little letters from such a mountain of a man. Then came "Hinkey Haines," "Herb Pennock," "Mike Gazella" and "Ben Shields."

You may have forgotten some of those names and many of the others that wander through the little book. But in the days when you were 12 years old and all ball-players were heroes, each signature was a personal triumph to be exhibited proudly to friends and rivals in the game of baseball clubhouse haunting.

You didn't have money enough to see more than a game or so a week but you'd go down daily to the ball park about 5 o'clock and when the game was over you'd sneak around the legs of the outcoming throng, past the cops and past the bellowings of Big Red, the groundkeeper. If you were a veteran clubhouse haunter you'd know Big Red just liked to bellow, that he didn't really care if you reached a choice spot just outside the clubhouse exit.

There were always a few grownups and silly girls hanging around, but the 12-year-olds disdained them. The 12-year-olds were pros in the technique of getting ball players' autographs.

The first heroes who'd emerge usually didn't amount to much. They were pitchers who'd been knocked out or utility men who'd sneaked off the bench a little early. The indiscriminate seekers would mob the early exiters. The "exclusive" name-chasers would stand in the background. One might say: "That's Ben Tate, the new second-string catcher. Do we want him?"

So they'd edge in, poking pencils and grimy books at flustered but usually distinctly pleased young men. Some of the players, particularly the ones that didn't matter much, would gruffly push the kids aside and you'd have to tag along all the way to Mr. Griffith's old bandbox office before they'd pause to grudgingly and grandiosely sign your book. Others would gravely warn you they had two signatures, one for clubhouse haunters, the other for sticking on the bottom of checks.

I hated Ty Cobb with a fierce hate. He was always the villain of the piece, stealing bases with his spikes in the air, insulting angelic Washington ball players, hurling what seemed to be awesome words at umpires. I hated Ty Cobb but I had to get his autograph. The great Cobb was ever in a fearsome mood when his Tigers had lost a tough one and woe to any kid who approached him.

I caught him sneaking out the back way under the stands once. He didn't even let out a snarl or look at the proffered book. He stuck out his hawk face and set course for Florida Avenue. I ran for three blocks to keep up with him, hating his guts all the time—but I had to get that name. Villain or not, he was a great man. At Seventh and S—which is a good run from the ball park—he finally found a cab. Just as he was climbing in and I was resigned to defeat, he grabbed the book and scrawled his name all the way across the page. He hasn't looked at me yet.

Walter Johnson, Joe Judge and Tris Speaker were gentlemen in any man's league. They treated the 12-year-olds like so many bank presidents, would write their names indefinitely, no matter who was waiting. I almost got killed "getting" Clark Griffith. But I finally did, along with the request that I depart his ball park immediately.

My favorite ball player was Joe Hauser, the International League slugger whose career with the Athletics was shortened by injury. Joe would not only write in your book and say "thank you" but he'd ask your name and stop for awhile and talk baseball. For a hero to do that was almost unthinkable.

Once in a car under the stands we found a famous New York pitcher lying on the seat. We thought he was sick until one of the more-knowing 12-year-olds whispered, "drunk." He opened one bloated eye and said:

"Gimme those books, boys. I'll sign 'em if you come out and see me beat these Washington bums tomorrow." He did.

Name after name in the old autograph book brings back mental pictures of the forgotten heroes. Nick Altrock, F. Marberry, a cryptic "Prothro," Geo Pipgras, Urban Shocker, Dixie Davis, Joe Burns, Pat Collins, Stanley Harris, George Moriarty, L. Richbourg. Sam Rice and Bob Meusel and Earl Mack, "Wamby," the man who made an unassisted triple play in a World Series.

Name after name of young men who were making a living the hard way, who weren't really heroes at all. But they were Heroes to the 12-year-olds and that's what counted.

28 Baseball Clubs Set For Florida Invasion

By the Associated Press

Tampa, Fla., Feb. 10.—The great, the near-great and the hopefuls of baseball will descend on Florida during the next three weeks as 28 major and minor league clubs arrive for their annual spring training.

The roster, largest ever to train in the State, will be composed of five American League clubs, five from the National League, seven International League clubs, seven from the American Association, and four from the Southern Association.

Parks and clubhouses throughout the State are being given finishing touches. Civic leaders and club owners alike were hopeful that the current cold wave will be only a memory by the time the baseballers get ready to "warm up."

2 Teams Shift Camps

Pitchers and catchers of the New York Giants will be the early birds, reporting at Miami Friday, six days in advance of the remainder of the squad. Other early arrivals will be batteries for the Cleveland Indians due at Fort Myers February 17. After that, they'll move in fast and be ready to start their "Grapefruit League" exhibition games by month's end.

Of the major clubs which trained in Florida last year, two have shifted their camps. The Boston Bees, who had trained in Florida for two decades, moved from Bradenton to Texas, and the New York Giants remained in the State but shifted from Winter Haven to Miami. The Brooklyn Dodgers will start their spring work at Havana but will be back at their old stand at Clearwater for the final two weeks.

Wes Ferrell Gets One More Chance—This Time With Bees

Quinn Agrees to Tryout; Only Four Red Sox Players Unsigned

By the Associated Press

Boston, Feb. 10.—Impressed by Wes Ferrell's claim that his 33-year-old pitching arm has regained much of its former skill, President Bob Quinn of the Boston Bees agreed today to give the veteran right-hander another chance to get started in the National League.

Ferrell, now in Sarasota, Fla., asked Quinn for an opportunity to prove his worth and the latter acquiesced by long-distance telephone.

20-Game Winner

He was a 20-game winner six times and his most successful seasons were in 1930, when he won 25 and lost 13 for the Indians, and in 1935, when he set up a 25-14 record during his second season with the Red Sox.

During the day Dick Merriwell Errickson, another right-hander, who won 12 and lost 13 for the Bees last season, dropped into headquarters to sign his 1941 contract. Merriwell told Quinn he had spent the weekend visiting a brother in

WES FERRELL

Worcester and was en route to his Vineland (N. J.) home.

The Red Sox list of unsigned players was reduced to four when Yank Terry, a righ-hander recalled from the Louisville farm late last season, was prevailed upon to accept the club's terms, which he had refused to do for several weeks. The only sockers remaining outside the fold are Jimmy Foxx, who probably will sign for General Manager Eddie Collins in St. Petersburg, Fla., within a few days. Ted Williams, Bobby Doerr and Cecil Hughson, a rookie right-hander from Louisville.

Eagles Seek to Borrow Player for Orioles Match Tonight

Washington Wants Help From Rovers

Mackenzie Stresses Immediate Need Of Centers; Will Trade, if Necessary

By Jack Munhall

Coach Redvers Mackenzie, fearful that the Washington Eagles cannot remain a contender in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League without immediate outside help, last night was angling with the New York Rovers for the loan or trade of at least one center.

On the eve of an important two-game series with the league-leading Baltimore Orioles, who invade Riverside Stadium tonight at 8:30 o'clock, Mackenzie sent a frantic wire to Rover officials and expects an answer early today.

Mackenzie said that it was highly probable that the Rovers would lend him a needed center in time for the Baltimore series, since Washington last month lent Goalie Les Colvin to the New York club until its own goal tender had recovered from injuries.

Considers Trade

Mackenzie was prodded into action Sunday after the weary Eagles lost to the Rovers for their seventh defeat in eight matches. Appraised of the fact that the Rovers were carrying 18 men—or a surplus of four—Mackenzie told New York Coach Alec Smith of his need for a centerman who could set up plays and stressed the need of such a performer in time for the two-match series with the Orioles.

"The Rovers have four of five wingmen and centers, any one of whom would be a big help to our exhausted team at this time," Mackenzie declared last night, "and I am willing to trade, if necessary, to obtain that player."

Included in the group of Rovers Mackenzie would choose from are Frank Dotten, one of the league's leading scorers; Elmer Kreller, member of the recent league All-Star team, and Lou Check, Frank Parker and "Red" Tilson. In return Washington is believed willing to part with one or two of several players. Mackenzie declined to name who was on the block, but it is not hard to guess.

The only players Washington probably would not let go are Norm Burns, Paul Courteau, Hal Dewey, Ross Knipfel, Len Burrage, Jim McCurry and Gordon Pranschke.

The local coach said he had not offered any aprticular Washington player to the Rovers, leaving it up to them to name anybody they were interested in.

Eagles Still in Race

Mackenzie's desperate effort to inject fresh blood into his team are prompted by the team's alarming slump and also its exhausted condition after eight matches in ten days.

"If it were not for these factors we might be able to win the championship with our present team," he explained, "although you know I have never been satisfied that I had a well-balanced squad. This was difficult to mention when we were leading the league, but all that time we were handicapped by the lack of a good center—a man who can make plays."

By this, Mackenzie indicated that he is dissatisfied with the play of Burns and Courteau, both of whom are fine scorers and skaters but who are more at home at wing than center.

Though many see the handwriting on the wall for the Eagles, they are not out of the championship fight by a long way. Only two points behind the defending champion Orioles, Washington could regain undisputed possession of the lead with victories tonight and tomorrow, a not improbable task if the Eagles can recapture their top form.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Feb. 10.—Casey Stengel's horror over the prospect of working for Bill Terry is what is bringing Max C. Meyer, Brooklyn pearl manufacturer and inventor of the popular game, "Psychic Baseball," into the sport. Meyer has deposited upward of $50,000 to the account of Bob Quinn in a Boston bank, and the deal whereby he, Quinn and Stengel will buy a 51 per cent controlling interest in the Boston Bees will go through shortly.

CONSIDINE

Stengel and Meyer have been close friends for a long time. They met some years ago at a demonstration of Meyer's patented game given by Jimmy Dykes and Jess Petty. They became close enough friends to spend their vacations together. And when it appeared last year that Terry was on the verge of buying the Bees—which would have either meant that Stengel was through or that he would have to work for the cheerless leader—Stengel called Meyer from California and asked him to save him from his fate. So how could Meyer turn down his friend?

At last the deal is about to go through. Judge Landis has ordered Charles F. Adams, who owns 71½ per cent of the Bees' stock, to clear out. Adams owns Suffolk Downs race track, which makes more money per day than the Bees make all season. And, as you know, Landis is almost paranoically opposed to racing. That is why he rejected Bing Crosby as a prospective keeper of the Bees. The remainder of Adams' stock probably will become Boston-owned, as is most of the stock which he does not now own. Some of it is owned by the Stevens family, catering kings of sport. Control represents about $350,000.

A little about Meyer: He is 57, good-natured, a family man and a lifelong baseball enthusiast. He was a sandlotter in Brooklyn and a semi-pro there and in New Haven. He was a rich man in 1927 when he invented "Psychic Baseball." Seems that his pearl, plastic and showcase business was involved in some troublesome litigation. He began to worry so much that he couldn't sleep. He tried cross-word puzzles and reading, but without effect. Then, like a flash, he decided to invent a game with a baseball motif, to be played with cards, to quiet his nerves. It wasn't as easy as all that. Worked on it for weeks, figuring out a system which permits a player to decide to offer at a pitch, to let it go, to try to steal second, to put on a hit and run, etc.

All this was for his own amusement. When he had it all worked out he used to take it along on trips with him and play the thing. One day he was going to Washington with a friend, and they were playing it on the train. The friend became so enthused that he suggested that Meyer take it to the Patent Office and apply for a patent. He did. They went to the game division and demonstrated it. "That's the cleverest thing ever brought in here," one of Uncle Sam's children cried, and immediately indicated that he would like to quit the Patent Office and go to work selling the game.

The patent was granted and Meyer in time sold it to Parker Brothers, the game manufacturers, and since that date has collected royalties on more than a half a million sets. A part of that dough, of course, is going into the purchase of the big league team, which constitutes some kind of a Horatio Alger climax.

Meyer told us today that the Bees cleared $15,000 last year, thanks to a late-season spurt. They won more games than any team in the National League during August, had the league's leading hitter for a while in Carvel Rowell, and won themselves a fine press in Boston and around the league—thanks to the genial presence of Stengel. The Brooklyn manufacturer believes that the acquisition of a first baseman and another pitcher or two will make the Bees a pennant threat and win considerably more patronage from Boston and New England fans. He recently made a business trip through New England and was astounded by the fact that so many persons in such cities as Worcester look to Boston for most of their baseball.

"I'm no MacPhail," Meyer chuckled today. "We won't have that much money to spend. But we're not going to seal our pocketbooks either. One of Stengel's worries was that the team would fall into the hands of a certain fellow who planned to sell Eddie Miller—to finance operations for this season. That's not the way to do things. We'll build. The radio people have advanced the Bees $45,000 and that's plenty to get going on. But, as I say, we won't be MacPhails.

"I don't know how Larry does it. I was in a group that tried to buy the Dodgers a few years ago and you never saw such glassy-eyed people in your life as the bankers who control that club. But Larry seems to know how to handle them."

It has always been Meyer's ambition to own a big league ball club. He is a fan of such magnitude that he made the spring training trip to Bradenton last year with the Bees. But he says he wouldn't think of going into the game if his friend Casey Stengel was not in it.

Temple Next For Hoya Five At Riverside

Nursing a two-game winning streak, Georgetown's basketball team returns to its home court tomorrow night, when it tackles Temple at Riverside Stadium. Because an ice club will be using the Riverside rink, the preliminary game between the Hoya freshmen and Gonzaga won't start until 8:30.

Their 11-game string of victories snapped by Syracuse in last week's road trip, the Hoyas appear headed for another pyramid of triumphs. True, they had difficulty winning from Colgate and Yale last week, but the Hilltoppers will have had sufficient rest by the time they take the court against the unpredictable Owls.

Temple has had a chance this year to rank with the Nation's best, but the Owls have consistently beaten the stronger team, then have lost mediocre quintets. The Temple record is ten victories and four defeats, except for the Penn State game of Saturday, in which the Owls were routed, 43-25, their losses have been by no more than two points. Temple was beaten in a previous game by Georgetown, 46-45, and by Michigan State twice, 23-22 and 37-35.

Georgetown's two defeats were at the hands of Loyola, of Baltimore, 36-32, and Syracuse, 49-43.

L. Waner Signs Up For His 15th Season With Pittsburgh

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Feb. 10.—Outfielder Lloyd Waner, last of the Pittsburgh Pirate team that won the National League pennant in 1927, signed a contract today for his fifteenth season with the Bucs.

WANER

Lloyd, who holds a .319 batting average for 14 seasons, was the junior member of the "Waner brothers" duo, broken up this year when the Bucs released his elder brother, Paul, an outfielder. Vince DiMaggio's heavy hitting and excellent fielding ousted Lloyd from a regular position last year and he finished with the season with an average of only .259.

Although he was reputed to have taken a heavy cut in the five-figure salary he drew as a regular, Waner signed the 1941 contract after a "friendly" conference with President William Benswanger, the club announced.

Bruins Fly Home And Set Precedent

Boston, Feb. 10 (AP).—Boston's red-hot Bruins broke National Hocky League precedent by flying home, in a body, from Detroit today in a chartered plane that left the Michigan city at 12:15 a. m. and arrived at Boston 3¼ hours later.

Red Cats' Grid Coach Sought By Detroit

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Feb. 10.—The Detroit Lions are stalking Bill Edwards, of Western Reserve University, as a candidate for their coaching vacancy, but the Red Cats' mentor tonight gave no indication of his attitude toward a job with the National Professional Football League club.

Edwards confirmed reports that he and his assistant, Roy (Dugan) Miller, had discussed the coaching position at Detroit last Friday with Fred Mandel, jr., owner of the Lions.

Would Double Salary

Beyond that, Edwards said only that any comment on the meeting must come from Mandel, who invited the Reserve coaches to Detroit.

Western Reserve's football team won seven of eight games last season under Edwards and the intersectional Sun Bowl game against Arizona State at El Paso, Tex., last New Year's Day.

Sports circles figured the Detroit Lions' coaching job would pay between $8,000 and $10,000 a year—more than double Edwards' salary at Reserve.

California Rains Bring Cut In Santa Anita Derby Field

Record Number Expected to Start, However; Cute Trick, Smacked, Kansas, Handy Tom And Transfigure Scratched

By the United Press

Arcadia, Calif., Feb. 10.—The field for the seventh running of the Santa Anita Derby began shrinking tonight as storm clouds drifted in from the north. But most railbirds stood by their prediction that a record number of thoroughbreds will be sent on a chase for the $50,000 purse.

At least five 3-year-olds previously considered probable starters fell by the wayside during the day. Another 28 remained in the running, and it appeared an even proposition that the old record of 21 horses would be surpassed when the bell rings for the mile and a furlong fixture Wednesday.

Those declared out were Cute Trick, Smacked, Transfigure, Kansas and Handy Tom. Several more will be lopped off when the field is officially named in the morning—but if rain falls in sizeable quantities, the race may bring out a half-dozen dark horses with a flair for mud.

The Weather Bureau predicted rain for tonight but said the clouds should blow over by Wednesday. A downpour is certain to enhance the chances of Cleveland Putnam's Swain and Mrs. N. D. Parson's Designator, but it is not expected to alter seriously the performances of the five top-notchers now considered the horses to beat.

The five are Charles S. Howard's Porter's Cap, probable favorite on any footing; Breckinridge Long's Nasca; A. G. Vanderbilt's Good Turn; Millsdale Stables Bull Reigh, and Valdina Farm's Valdina Groom. Out of this group should come the winner, and should any other horse come home first the triumph will be regarded as distinctly an upset.

Tarheels' Glamack Sets S. C. Scoring Mark; Rings Up 45

By the Associated Press

Chapel Hill, N. C., Feb. 10.—Towering George Glamack set a new Southern Conference basketball scoring record tonight as he led the North Carolina White Phantoms to a 76-53 victory Clemson.

Glamack scored 19 field goals and 7 foul shots for a total of 45 points before he was ejected from the game on excessive personal fouls.

The previous one-game high was 34 points. That record was jointly held by Washington and Lee's Dick Pinck and Preston Westmoreland of the University of South Carolina.

With 11 minutes left in tonight's game, Glamack had broken the record with 35 points. The crowd cheered each succeeding point and gave the big star an ovation that stopped the tilt when big George fouled out with 3 minutes left to play.

Curious Coin Leaves Field in Miami Shores Purse at Hialeah

3-Year-Old Leads by 5 Lengths; Air Brigade, Shim Sham Follow; Betty's Bob Wins 7th

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 10.—Curious Coin, the colt that followed the record-smashing Dispose home in the recent Bahamas Handicap, just galloped away from six other 3-year-olds in the 7-furlong Miami Shores Purse here this afternoon. The Coldstream Stable's chestnut son of Brandon Mint, a 7-to-10 choice, reported five lengths on top, running over a drying out strip in 1:24 2-5 under top weight of 124 pounds.

Air Brigade was second, three lengths better than Shim Sham. Magic Stream, Alned, Hardy Bud and Unquote completed the field in that order. The winner paid $3.40 for two.

The biggest weekday crowd of the meeting saw Curious Coin add to his Flamingo Stakes prestige. Others in the field nominated for the $20,000 added event were Magic Stream, Hardy Bud and Alned.

This was a day for hunch players. They could have made successful parlays on Bit o' Green and Irish Day (Erins Sun failed them), and on Curious Roman and Curious Coin.

Magic Stream, Hardy Bud and Shim Sham led Curious Coin for more than 2 furlongs before Irving Anderson decided to allow the favorite to begin his winning charge. The Coldstream colt circled the leaders leaving the backstretch, shot to the front soon afterward and romped through the home lane.

More rain fell overnight, but Old Sol was present most of the afternoon. Even sun failed to take the chill out of the air for 14,281 patrons.

Betty's Bob had too much speed for the platers opposed to him in the seventh race of a mile and a half. Apprentice Kaufman drove the gelding to a length and a half triumph at $5.80 for $2, thus giving favorite backers their fifth success of the day. Betty's Bob opened up a long lead but was hard ridden to stave off Portsmouth in the stretch run. The latter was an easy second over Old River, five lengths separating the pair.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BIT O'GREEN, $6.60, $4.50, $3.30; ALL EVEN, $26.30, $13.00; OLD FRIEND, $3.70.

BIT O'GREEN, hustled to the front, was then raied in front and won with speed in reserve. ALL EVEN, on the outside, gradually bettered her position and wore OLD FRIEND down. The latter, a forward contender all the way, hung in the final drive. JAN ONE saved much ground entering the stretch, moved up strongly, but then weakened in the stretch run.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good from gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 3:39. Off at 3:39. Winner, Wheatley Stable's br. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—IRISH DAY, $7.10, $4.20, $3.40; BOSSY SERVANT, $6.40, $4.40; INGOMAR, $14.30.

IRISH DAY, going forwardly under slight restraint until straightened into the stretch, took command when called upon, but was strongly ridden to stave off BOSSY SERVANT'S bid. The latter broke a trifle slowly, gradually improved his position while racing wide and was going gamely at the end. INGOMAR displayed speed, raced FETTACAIRN into defeat and held on well in the drive. FETTACAIRN weakened in the final furlong.

FIFTH RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:09. Off at 4:09. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WAKE ROBIN, $13.50, $6.60, $4.60; SYL'S BETTY, $11.50, $6.30; CONSCRIPT, $4.50.

WAKE ROBIN, in the thick of contention throughout, took command entering the stretch, continued determinedly when placed to a drive and held SYL'S BETTY safe in the final drive. SYL'S BETTY, compelled to race wide, finished gamely to punishment, but could not get up. CONSCRIPT, prominent and saving ground all the way, outlasted NIGHTLAND. The latter closed a big sag. RED MEADOW went wide.

SIXTH RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,400. The Miami Shores. Grade C. For 3-year-olds. Start bad from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:37. Off at 4:38. Winner, Coldstream Stable's ch. c. (3), by Brandon Mint—Curiosity Box. Trained by J. Howard. Value to winner, $1,000; second, $250; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:24⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CURIOUS COIN, $3.40, $2.60, $2.40; AIR BRIGADE, $3.70, $2.90; SHIM SHAM, $3.80.

CURIOUS COIN, reserved off the pace until midway around the turn, assumed command at his rider's leisure and won with speed in reserve. AIR BRIGADE broke a bit slowly, gained steadily and easily disposed of the others in the final furlong. SHIM SHAM, a forward contender throughout, held on well to outlast MAGIC STREAM. The latter faltered in the stretch run. UNQUOTE stumbled and almost fell at the start.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-half miles (chute). Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 5:06. Off at 5:06½. Winner, Mrs. R. E. Wingfield. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 2:31.

BETTY'S BOB took command at once and, rated in front, held sway the entire trip. PORTSMOUTH moved up stoutly entering the stretch, but was unable to overhaul the winner. OLD RIVER, well ridden, closed stoutly under strong pressure. BELL HELEN finished resolutely.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:39. Off at 5:40. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PHOEBUS, $35.50, $17.90, $9.90; GOURMET, $11.20, $6.20; WOODEN INDIAN, $6.90.

PHOEBUS went to the front at once, opened up a long lead, held sway to the stretch and was roused smartly when challenged and drew out in the last sixteenth. GOURMET was not rushed the first half mile, moved up readily when called upon and made a bold bid in the stretch, but was not good enough. WOODEN INDIAN, unable to keep up early, closed fast in the final furlong. DARK MAY moved up smartly to threaten at the far turn, then weakened. BELLRINGER showed a dull effort.

Hash to Carry Top Weight In $10,000 'Cap

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Fe. 10.—Mrs. Payne Whitney's 5-year-old Hash has been assigned top weight of 122 pounds for the $10,000 added McLennan Memorial Handicap at Hialeah Park next Saturday, with Col. E. R. Bradley's Bimelech declared out of the race.

Bimelech, 1940 3-year-old champion, was the only withdrawal among 89 original nominees. His handlers said they were reserving him for the $50,000 added Widener Cup race March 1.

Hash, conqueror of Challedon in the $25,000 Narragansett Special last year, was assigned only two pounds more than E. D. Shaffer's English importation, Heliopolis.

Warren Wright's Whirlaway, the leading juvenile money horse last year and a winner in his 3-year-old bow Saturday, will carry only 104 pounds if he goes in the McLennan, at a mile and one furlong. Whirlaway, however, is a doubtful starter.

Joseph E. Widener's French Hopeful, Raphael II, drew 117 pounds.

L. J. Marks' Many Stings, winner of both the McLennan and the Widener last season, was assigned 116 pounds with three others, Mrs. Marie Evans' Shotput, 1940 distance champion; J. B. Partridge's Robert L., and Mrs. B. F. Whitaker's Sickle T.

Gonzaga Routs Little Hoyas, Clinches Catholic Prep Title

Purple Five Wins, 52-26; Record Set

Two of Year's High Individual Scores Made by Mulvihill, Fran Counselman

Practically everything it did yesterday turned to points for Gonzaga High's cage team, and the result was an easy 52-26 triumph over Georgetown Prep in a Catholic prep battle at Garrett Park.

With the victory the Purple virtually clinched 1941 honors among this vicinity's three Catholic schools, at the same time taking credit for two of the highest individual performances of the year. Bob Mulvihill, all-metropolitan ace, turned in 19 points and his rangy mate, Franny Counselman, hung up 17. Five other players contributed to the scoring as substitutions were made freely.

Gonzaga's first-quarter play was a good indication of the final outcome, and so was Mulvihill's. The lanky 17-year-old veteran chalked up eight points as he sparked his team to a 14-2 lead at the end of eight minutes. The host's only basket went to Bob Barrett, forward, who managed to top Georgetown Prep scoring for the game with nine points.

Prep performed slightly better in the second period, allowing its charging foe only a 12-5 edge in point-making which was good for a 26-7 lead at intermission. The losers' best quarter was the third, in which it outscored Gonzaga, 12-10.

Its victory was Gonzaga's twelfth in 16 games, and Prep's loss brought its record for the season to seven setbacks and eight victories.

Charley Gelbert, former Nats infielder now playing with the Brooklyn Dodgers, is kept right in line by his recent bride, as anyone can plainly see. When Charley brought out his baseball bat and began swinging the new Mrs. Gelbert promptly armed with a rolling pin. The by-play occured in their New Orleans home

Two Important High Games Set Today

A deadlock for second place in the interhigh basketball standings will be broken today when the teams involved, Eastern and Tech, do battle in one of two public school clashes. The game will take place at Eastern at 3:30. In the other scrap at the same time Western, clinging fourth place, tangles with the hard luck forces of Woodrow Wilson at Roosevelt gym.

The only thing hinging on the Tech-Eastern fray will be the psychological edge which will belong to the winner in case the teams meet in the round robin tournament later in the month. Each club is assured of at least a playoff for a title tourney berth so far.

In the Western-Wilson game the former will be seeking to stay in the select "four" which will compete in title play, while Wilson will be pending on a victory to retain the slightest chance of entering even a playoff for the championship round.

Five other schoolboy games mark the day's card, all in the afternoon. Bethesda-Chevy Chase comes in to St. John's for a game; St. James, of Hagerstown, is entertained by Landon; Washington-Lee and Central meet again on the latter's court; Coolidge and Anacostia tangle on the "flats," and Rockville moves over to Maryland Park.

In the first period the locals were better by 2 points, in the second by a single point and by 7 in the final quarter.

Reichwein, never before an outstanding star for the young Colonials, went to work on Maryland when the count was deadlocked at 14-14. He poured through seven baskets and a free throw before another G. W. mate hit the hoop and in all accounted for 19 points during the second half, his total for the game.

It was the little Terps' third defeat of the season and the second time they have lost to the G. W. frosh. Their other setback was by Georgetown frosh.

Alvis in New York, Waxman Here Today

Ray to Announce 'Momentous' Fight For Uline's Arena; Max to Launch Plea for Fair Play for Harry Jeffra

Momentous doings are cooking on the local boxing front—at least that's what Ray Alvis would have you believe.

In a "I've-got-something-stupendous" manner, Alvis last night announced that he's shoving off for New York today at 7:15 a. m. in order to announce the fight that will mark his return to the local boxing picture.

Ray declined to say just why he has to make his announcement from New York, but he said the fight will be staged in Uline's arena April 3—"something really big," in fact.

Waxman Here Today

Meanwhile, Max Waxman, the heavy-jowled business manager of Jack Dempsey, is expected to come to town today to launch an appeal to the District Boxing Commission for assurances of fair play for Harry Jeffra in the 15-round title featherweight fight scheduled for Turner's Arena next Tuesday night.

Joey Archibald, who meets Jeffra under sponsorship of Promoter Joe Turner, also is expected to arrive and set up training quarters in Huron Gymnasium, 511 Eleventh Street Northwest.

Local Referee Wanted

Mindful of the "raw" decision against Jeffra in the last title fight with Archibald, staged in Griffith Stadium in 1939, Waxman said yesterday:

"I know this is Archibald's town. He's won 17 straight here but my boy beat him in Baltimore and should have been given that decision in Washington. This time I want to make sure we get an even break from the judges and referee."

The District Boxing Commission already has said a local referee will work the title fight.

Jake Schaefer, Bozeman Win

By the Associated Press

Chicago Feb. 10.—Jake Schaefer, of Cleveland, and Jay Bozeman, of Vallejo, Calif., continued their winning ways today in the world's championship three cushion billiards tourney, both hoping to catch undefeated Willie Hoppe in the late stages of the round-robin battle.

Schaefer reeled off his eleventh victory in 13 matches with a 50 to 33 decision in 46 innings over Art Thurnblad, of Kenosha, Wis. The former balkline expert moved into a strong lead early and was never in great danger.

Bozeman defeated Otto Reiselt, of Philadelphia, 50 to 25, in 34 innings, making his won-lost record the same as Schaefer's. The loss was Reiselt's fifth straight after he had won eight in a row.

Schaefer and Bozeman, coholders of second place, are the only contestants with any chance of overtaking Hoppe, who has won 12 straight.

Although out off the running, little Joe Chamaco, of Mexico City, turned in the finest matinee performance, defeating John Fitzpatrick, of Los Angeles, 50 to 29, in 53 innings. Chamaco took a wide edge on his foe with a 12 run, the tournament's high so far, in the fifth inning.

Junior Aquatic Championships Set

Six junior championship events and races for boys of 12 years and under and 15 years and under will mark the annual D. C. A. A. U. Junior Swimming Championships Saturday at the Eastern Branch of the Boys Club of Washington pool.

Strongest competition is anticipated from the W. B. C. team, under the direction of Max Rote; Y. M. C. A., Jewish Community Center, Central and Wilson High Schools and Shoreham and Ambassador Hotels.

Grooms, Turf Club Settle Differences

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Feb. 10.—A temporary armistice between the Los Angeles Turf Club and its grooms was made permanent today.

The grooms went on strike last Thursday, a few minutes before the start of the first race at Santa Anita Park, but returned to work Friday, with the understanding they would arbitrate their differences before Jerry Giesler, chairman of the California Horse Racing Commission.

The grooms won restoration of licenses for five of their members who were disqualified by the track because of a series of altercations. They also won a ruling that no licenses may be suspended or revoked without cause, and that appeal to the commission may be obtained in the event of adverse ruling by the board of stewards. They agreed not to strike again without first presenting grievances to the racing commission.

The demand of the grooms that they receive $10 for winning horses in their care will be discussed at a conference between truf club stewards and a committee of grooms. The grooms will be permitted to witness races in the grandstand and place bets there.

Brobmier Meets PlummerThursday

Fred Brobmier, a follower of the scissors school, will try his art on the torso of Gentleman Lou Plummer, of Baltimore, Thursday night on the wrestling card featuring the Green Hornet versus Ernie Dusek, at Turner's Arena.

Tiger Tasker and Eddie Newman have a spot on the program and a cowgirl attraction will trot out two feminine groan artists, Patsy Miller, of Idaho, and Gladys Gilliam, of Oklahoma City.

X-ray pictures of Leo Gaffney's broken right hand yesterday eased the fears of Catholic University Coach Eddie LaFond that his star lightweight will have to give up his boxing career. The two-pounder, out for the year, will be as good as new next season, LaFond said. It was feared the injury might force him to quit the ring.

Miami-Nassau Yacht Race Close Contest

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Feb. 10.—The closest competition in the eight-year history of the event was forecast today on the eve of the Miami-to-Nassau yacht race, which drew nine skippers to the 184-mile event.

Until a week ago, the blue-water classic was considered mainly a contest between William Labrot's Stormy Weather, four times winner, and Robert W. Johnson's Good News, which defeated Stormy Weather in the 1940 St. Petersburg-Havana race.

Escapade a Threat

Then observers began to notice that Henry Fownes' 72-foot Escapade was sailing beautifully in practice runs and it generally was agreed that the Stamford, Conn., entry would give Stormy Weather and Good News a close battle.

The 54-foot yawl Belisarius, however, gave this theory a rude jolt Saturday by beating Stormy and three other yachts in the 28-mile Sir Thomas Lipton Challenge Cup race. The Belisarius, flying the burgee of the Off-Soundings Club, of Springfield, Mass., was a 1 minute and 29 second margin over Stormy on corrected time.

Gulf Stream Looks Good

Dudley Sharp's Gulf Stream, 70-foot yawl from the Texas Corinthian Club fleet, also demonstrated that it must be reckoned with. Gulf Stream was first across the finish line in the Lipton race. As scratch boat of the field, it was third on corrected time.

The largest entry was the 72-foot Escapade, owned by Henry G. Fownes, of Stamford, Conn., and the smallest, the 35-foot Quartermore, owned by Gordon Mendelssohn, of Detroit.

The Owls return to Washington following the Towson tilt to prepare for a stiff match with the Wilson Teachers College Alumni, on Thursday evening.

Shaw Removes Name From List At Notre Dame

By the Associated Press

Santa Clara, Calif., Feb. 10.—Coach L. T. (Buck) Shaw, highly successful football mentor at Santa Clara University, said today he had asked that his name be withdrawn from further consideration for the position of head coach at Notre Dame University.

Shaw, rated as one of the top-flight football coaches of the country and creator of a remarkable record for wins at Santa Clara, said he had advised the Rev. John J. Cavanaugh, chairman of the Notre Dame board of athletic control, of his desire.

"I am highly honored that the Notre Dame authorities have seen fit to consider me for the position," Shaw said. "After careful deliberation, however, I feel that in justice to my family and to the University of Santa Clara authorities, who have been most cooperative and eminently fair since I became head coach, I should remain in my present position.

"I am advising Notre Dame at this time in order that they may have this information when they hold their meeting tonight."

Cotton Futures

New York, Feb. 10 (AP).—Cotton futures advanced 2 points today, while speculative attention veered to Washington and prospects the lease-lend bill might provide a base for disposal of huge United States stocks of the staple.

Trade covering and mill price fixing offset light hedging and liquidation in March. Trade was slim, though, in the face of quiet conditions in Worth Street textile markets and Southern spot centers.

Mill demand for spot cotton has slackened considerably, but prices held firm and some mills were believed to have large requirements still to cover.

Cloth dealers said business was limited largely to routine Monday checking operations anl prices were firm.

No exports Saturday; season so far, 700,905 bales. Port receipts, 10,695; port stocks, 3,489,649.

Stock Market Drifts Irregularly Lower; Day's Sales Fall to 294,610 Shares

New York, Feb. 10.—Efforts to keep stocks on their decovery course fell rather flat in today's market.

Industrials did fairly well in the morning but light selling shifted the direction for the majority in the afternoon and the close was irregularly lower. Declines ranged from fractions to a point or so for relatively active leaders. There was an assortment of modest plus signs.

Owing to the lack of real volume price changes were more or less meaningless. Transfers amounted to only 294,610 shares against 341,100 Friday, both turnovers being the lowest since September 16. The Associated Press average of 60 issues was off .1 of a point at 42.2.

As in past weeks, brokers said, war and taxes remained as the principal bullish impediments. Business developments were on the favorable side but apparently uninspiring marketwise. U. S. Steel reported January shipments at a peak for this month and within 1 per cent of the record established in May, 1929.

This week's mill operations for the industry were estimated up moderately. "Big Steel" stock finished with a loss of ⅝ of a point. Bethlehem, Republic and Youngstown Sheet laso were a shade down.

Some nervousness was aroused, it was suggested, by the British severance of diplomatic relations with Rumania, fears of a pessimistic turn of affairs in Bulgaria and the bombing of Iceland by the Nazis. Outstanding British military successes in Africa seemingly had scant market effect.

Woolworth dipped ½ in the wake of the company's earnings statement revealing a substantial drop in net due to taxes and slackening dividends from its British subsidiary.

General Motors was up ⅜ but Chrysler slipped ¾. Strong automotive production and sales proved an early stimulant for the motor group.

Among losers were Santa Fe, U. S. Rubber, American Telephone, Sears Roebuck, American Can, Allied Chemical, Standard Oil of N. J., Bath Iron Works, Anaconda, Kennecott, Westinghouse and General Electric.

Clinging to advances were Eastman Kodak, Du Pont, Cerro De Pasco, Texas Corporation, Chesapeake & Ohio, Pennsylvania, Western Union, Consolidated Edison, Paramount Pictures, N. Y. Shipbuilding and International Harvester.

Slimness of the day's proceedings was exemplified by the fact that of more than 1,200 listed issues, but 597 were traded. Of these 214 were down, 193 up and 190 unchanged.

Bonds and commodities were mixed. Wheat at Chicago was off ⅞ to 1¼ cents a bushel and corn ⅜ to ½ lower. Cotton gained 10 cents a bale.

Aluminum of America was up 2 points in the Curb and small improvement was held by Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Glen Alden Coal and Republic Aviation. In the minus column were American Gas, Brewster Aero, Humble Oil and Phoenix Securities. About 110,000 shares were traded here compared with 82,000 in the previous full session.

FCA Cuts Rate On Farm Loans

By the Associated Press

The Farm Credit Administration yesterday reduced the interest rates on loans to cooperatives for the purchase of farm equipment.

A. G. Black, the governor, estimated the new rates, ranging from 3½ to 4 per cent, would save cooperatives some $130,000 annually.

He said the lower rates also would apply to outstanding loans, some of which now bear interest as high as 4½ per cent. This is the first interest reduction on such loans since 1935.

Japanese Toys Fast Vanishing From U. S. Stores

American purchases of Japanese toys have been declining for several years, and now, the Commerce department said yesterday, "American toy buyers are reported to be withdrawing from Japan."

Prices of Japanese toys were said to be rising to the point where they are no longer salable in this country, both because of a scarcity of raw materials in Japan and other factors.

After the world war, Jspan superseded Germany as the world's leading toymaker, but more recently the United States has taken the title for itself.

Lead Price Advanced To 5.65 Cents a Pound

New York, Feb. 10 (AP).—American Smelting & Refining Co. today advanced the price of lead .15 of a cent to 5.65 cents a pound. This was the first change since December 2 when the quotation was lowered a similar amount.

Officials said the increase was necessary because the company was compelled to use foreign lead to supply domestic demand.

St. Joseph Lead followed with a similar advance to 5.70 cents a pound New York base and 5.50 cents East St. Louis.

Wheat Breaks, Hits New Lows For 4 Months

Chicago, Feb. 10.—Wheat prices tumbled more than a cent today, eliminating about all of the laborious advance chalked up last week and carrying quotations beak to within fractions of the lowest levels in more than four months.

There was no new development to inspire the setback but neither was there anything which encouraged buying. Offerings of moderate sized lots revealed lack of buying support except at price concessions. Most of the selling was regarded as profit taking and stop loss liquidation with some "short" sales included.

Lagging flour business and export trade as well as the bright new crop outlook and the unsettled international situation, with British and American officials forcasting a German invasion attempt, were fundamental bearish factors.

Wheat closed ⅞@1¼ lower than Saturday, May, 81¾@81⅝; July, 75⅝@75½; corn, ⅜@½ down; May and July, 6(¼; oats, ¼ off; soybeans, ⅞@1¼ lower; rye, ¼(AP)⅝ off and lard 2-8 lower.

Oil Output In Year Sets U. S. Record

By the Associated Press

Crude oil production in 1940 totaled 1,351,847,000 barrels—a new record. Last year's output was 87,500,000 barrels more than the 1939 total.

In December, production remained about stationary, with a daily average of 3,565,200 ballers, compared with 3,563,500 in November.

Announcing these figures in its monthly report yesterday, the Bureau of Mines said crude production in December totaled 110,520,000 barrels, compared to 106,904,000 in November. No material changes, it said, were recorded in the daily average output in any of the producing States.

The balance of supply and demand during the month hinged, the bureau added, on foreign trade, and an increase in imports and a decline in xeports, resulting in a net gain of about 900,000 barrels in crude stocks compared with a decline of about 700,000 barrels in November.

Stocks of alll oils were drawn on in December to the extent of about 2,870,000 barrels. For the year there was a net gain of about 39,000,000 barrels, which brought th total of stocks on hand on December 31 to 563,954,000 barrels.

Production of aviation gasoline amounted to 6,894,000 barrels. Stocks totaled 9,512,000 barrels and 497,000 barrels were exported.

President Roosevelt's battered, but treasured, campaign hat, which has accompanied him through three elections to the Presidency is to bring its good luck qualities to needy actors in Hollywood.

For Jean Hersholt, star of the "Dr. Christian" series on C. B. S. and president of the Motion Picture Relief Fund whose programs you also hear over C. B. S. every Sunday night, has announced that President Roosevelt has donated it to him and it is to be raffled off for the benefit of the Fund on March 17.

That date is the Roosevelts' wedding anniversary and the Motion Picture Relief Fund is going to throw a special party on that date at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles where the more well-to-do members of the film colony will bid for the unique campaign relic and the proceeds will go toward helping their aged and needy brethren.

The Presidential fedora came into Hersholt's possession as he was attending the Birthday ball ceremonies in Washington. Hersholt says that, as a joke, he asked the President for the hat, expecting that the request would be taken only as a joke. But, much to everyone's surprise, including Hersholts and Mrs. Roosevelt's, the President said he'd send for it at Hyde Park and have it shipped down immediately.

Which he did and now, carefully packed in a box, a procedure which probably is quite new to it, it is being kept by Hersholt until the day of the big party.

Contract Bridge

In today's hand Michael T. Gottlieb, formerly of the Four Aces and one of the subtlest bidders among the bridge stars, managed to dupe his illustrious adversaries and buy a contract for three spades, when the opponents could have gone as high as they chose in hearts or diamonds to sacrifice with small loss.

Though he had ample strength to bid, he boldly passed the first round, in a situation where any good player would stretch his neck to carry his partner to a game-going contract. His distribution was such that he realized unusual tactics were necessary to prevent the opponents from sacrificing and possibly even winning game in their suits. Thus he decided to play 'possum and pass, giving every indication of weakness.

The real test of his greatness as a bidder came on the second round, when, upon achieving his aim, he restrained from the moment of triumph in which most players, experts included, would indulge. He refused to redouble, though the contract was a cinch. Why should he scare away the crafty birds whose tails he had so neatly salted? Gottlieb resisted the impulse to gloat and passed again, to win game, rubber and the pieces of paper that were autographed and passed out after the game was over.

Allis-Chalmers Heads, Union Aides to Confer

By the Associated Press

Representatives of the C. I. O.-United Automobile Workers and the management of the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. will meet with the Defense Commission today in new Government-sponsored efforts to end the work stoppage at the company's Milwaukee plant.

The three-week-old strike has kept 9,000 men idle and halted work on $40,000,000 worth of defense orders, including machinery needed for naval craft and for the Army's powder production program.

A management committee conferred yesterday with Navy Secretary Knox and reported it had received "helpful suggestions" for getting finished and partly finished orders removed from the picketed plant. Among the union's demands is a union shop.

As the Government renewed its efforts to settle this dispute, a new strike developed affecting delivery of machinery for warships. C. I. O. electrical workers walked out at the Hertner Electric Co., Cleveland, which has orders for generators for submarines and destroyers. The company employs 80.

Green Attacks C. I. O.

The strike was in protest against dismissal of the union's shop chairman, discharged, a company spokesman said, for "valid reasons."

Meanwhile, a threatened strike at the Quincy Mining Co., Hancock, Mich., by C. I. O. workers was postponed for 90 days to permit, union representatives said, negotiations in Washington to increase the price of copper from 12 to 15 cents per pound.

During the day, William Green, president of the A. F. L. linked C. I. O. strikes with what he said was the C. I. O.'s opposition, "wholeheartedly in line with Communist policy," to the rearmament program.

He declared it was "very significant to me" that the Milwaukee Central Industrial Council issued a statement "denouncing the national defense program" two weeks before the Allis-Chalmers strike was called.

Rail Shops on 6-Day Week

San Francisco, Feb. 10 (AP).—A six-day work week to keep ahead of transportation needs due to the defense program has been established in all Southern Pacific Railway locomotive, freight and passenger car repair shops, J. H. Dyer, vice president in charge of operations, said today.

The change affects nearly 13,000 employes, including 500 shopmen who were returned to the pay roll. Company headquarters said the change meant another day's pay for the employes involved, on the basis of the wage scale previously paid for the five-day week.

Maryland Assembly to Get Bill Creating New Tax Board

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 10.—Legislation providing for creation of a new department of revenue and taxes, as recommended by the Maryland Tax Revision Commission, will be sent to the General Assembly this week, Gov. O'Conor said today.

The bill is being drafted by the State law department, he announced, and will incorporate all of the recommendations of the commission—some of which, in their original form, aroused vigorous opposition from county assemblymen.

Most grounds for the objections have been eliminated through compromises the commissoin agreed upon in drafting its final suggestions, the Governor said.

Revised Proposal

Principal county criticism was directed at a recommendation which would have deprived county commissioners of their present authority to make tax assessments. As revised, the proposal reads:

"All local assessments of property should be made by or under the supervision of a chief assessor, instead of being the primary responsibility of the county commissioners, as at present."

The commission also recommended that the present county assessment supervisors be continued in office and that the system of selecting such supervisors—from lists submited by the counties to the central department—be continued.

Whether the compromise would meet the approval of county assemblymen was problematical; in advance of the measure's introduction, several sources predicted the bill would be liberally amended if the commission's recommendations were followed out to the letter.

The new department of revenue and taxes would be headed by a director at $7,000 annually, under the commission's plan, and would include several bureaus, each headed by a chief. These bureaus would handle, separately, property taxes and valuations, corporation taxes, individual income taxes, inheritance and estate taxes and business licenses.

Automobile Group Asks Elimination Of 'Highway Slums'

Unsightly "highway slums" were attacked yesterday by the American Automobile Association in announcing a new program for roadside improvements.

The club will seek nationwide legislation placing roadsides under State zoning regulations, according to President Thomas P. Henry.

The A. A. A. proposed establishment of protective strips of not more than 1,000 feet on each side of highways, governed by State highway commissions and recommended that such strips be zoned only after studies by State planning boards and public hearings.

The motoring club conceded that varying highway problems would not permit adoption of a standard roadside design for all States, but urged that individual surveys be made to determine how such zoning rules might best be applied.

Smithsonian Gets Specimens Of Soviet Meteors

It took a special act of the Central Soviet to permit two tiny bits of rock to leave Russia, to come to the Smithsonian Institution. They've just arrived here—two fragments of meteorites or shooting stars it was announced yesterday.

From the large collection being built up at Moscow, these two bits were spared, upon recommendation of the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Specimens of American meteorites had been sent in exchange for them.

A slice weighing 220 grams was received here from a Russian iron meteorite which fell in Siberia in 1916. Fragments totaling 700 grams were sent from a stony meteorite which fell at Lhotnevyi in the Ukraine in 1930.

Discrimination Denied in U. S. Defense Work

By the Associated Press

Hampton, Va., Feb. 10.—The Federal Works Agency will begin an immediate inquiry into alleged discrimination against Negroes on National Defense housing projects in the Tidewater area of Virginia, John M. Carmody, administrator, said today in a letter to the Hampton Institute Builders Conference.

This announcement was a highlight of the opening session of 200 colored builders from 20 States, who gathered to discuss the "Negro Builder and National Defense."

George Zuidima, hiring agent for contractors engaged in the construction of Fort Eustis, appeared before the conference to answer reports that skilled colored carpenters were being discriminated against there.

Zuidima said that "you can't change custom over night," but pointed out that 2,300 of the 5,800 employes at Fort Eustis were Negro skilled and unskilled workers.

Lester B. Granger, assistant executive secretary of the National Urban League, who made today's principal address, charged that Carmody's pronouncement against discrimination was nothing more than a "pious wish."

"Efficiency isn't half so important as democracy," said Granger, in answering what he termed "specious pleas that the cause of efficiency in defense projects made it impossible to hire Negroes at this time."
